Hittle Bats, Pitches Nats to 6-5 Victory

His Single In Seventh Breaks Tie, Beats Chisox

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

Chicago, May 16.—Lloyd Hittle who has been carving a unique career for himself by beating the White Sox, claimed them for his very own again this evening. The Nats' little lefthander redhead was the boss of their 6-5 victory.

Hittle was not part of the game at all until the fifth inning when he walked into a mess bequeathed him by Joe Haynes, the Nats' starting pitcher. Then his strange hex over the White Sox began to take hold.

Two innings later, he personally banged home Washington's winning run with a single to right center that unlocked a 5-5 tie. And at the finish he had the seventh victory of his two-year major league career—five of them over his pets, the White Sox.

He had a cohero in Sam Mele, whose red hot hitting streak tonight included a three-run, fifth inning homer off Bill Wight that wiped out a 3-2 Chicago lead. Mele drove in four of the Nats' six runs and zoomed his current batting figure to .415.

The Nats had to rise above a three-run homer by Gus Zernial that erased their 2-0 lead in the fourth inning and gave 40l4 Comiskey Park fans visions of a White Sox victory.

Zernail was in the Nats' hair again in the fifth when, as the first man Hittle faced after relieving Haynes, he doubled to left for the run that made it 5-5. But from that point, Hittle was in complete charge.

After the fifth inning, Hittle yielded the Sox no runs at all, and gave up only three hits. The two walks he allowed were intentional. Twice the Sox loaded the bases against him and couldn't score. To protect his slim lead in the ninth, he didn't permit a ball to be nudged out of the infield.

Mele set the Nats up in a 1-0 lead in the first inning when he singled to score Stewart who had led off with a single to right and moved to second on a passed ball. Haynes made it 2-0 for himself in the second with a long double to center that scored Evans who had singled.

Haynes didn't allow any kind of a hit until the fourth, and then he was socked for four. The big one was Zernial's blast into the left field upper deck after Adams and Michaels had singled.

Mele reclaimed a 5-3 lead for the Nats before anybody was out in the fifth. Stewart and Robinson were on base with singles when Slammin' Sammy parked his first homer of the season on a line into the lower deck in left. That blow disposed

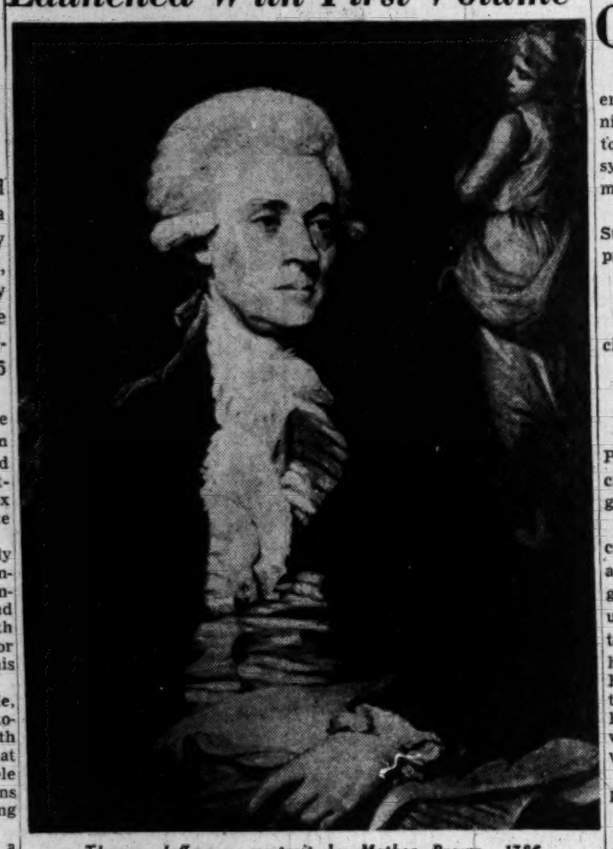
Epic Editorial Venture

Colossal Work on Jefferson Launched With First Volume



Thomas Jefferson, portrait by Mather Brown, 1786

By Adrienne Koch

THE PAPERS OF THOMAS JEFFERSON. Volume I: 1760-1776. Julian P. Boyd, Editor; Lyman H. Butterfield and Mina R. Bryan, Associate Editors. Princeton University Press, lv. and 679 pp. Ill. $10.

There will be little dispute that this monumental work-in-progress at the Princeton Library is one of the greatest editorial and publishing ventures in this Nation's history, and one that will, as the first volume demonstrates, establish new standards for historical truth in the free countries of the world.

Those who respond automatically to architectonic constructive imagination in any media will be fascinated by the master plan for these 52 volumes devoted to the writings of Thomas Jefferson. But those who appreciate the extraordinary humanistic spirit of America's greatest philosopher-statesman and who value above all his timeless formulation of the conditions and ideals of a free society will want to study carefully this and each successive volume in order to seize the opportunity they offer to know Jefferson and the age when the American Republic was being launched.

Each volume, of course, will have its distinctive subject-matter, determined in part by the events that filled Jefferson's life in the slice of time being treated. Some eager students of history who tend to approach it primarily in terms of presidential reigns will bite their finger nails and wait impatiently for the volumes that will deal with 1801-1809, while those who are devotees of the dynamics of social revolution will long for the appearance of the volume covering 1789 and Jefferson's reportage of the early phase of the French Revolution.

But this first volume cannot fail to give rich rewards to all who have the slightest curiosity about what kind of man Thomas Jefferson was, and who wish to

President To Hail Book On Jefferson

Publication of the first of a projected 52-volume edition of Jefferson's writings will be marked at a 3:30 p.m. ceremony in the Library of Congress today, when President Truman will set a precedent.

It will be the first time in the history of the library, observing its sesquicentennial this year, that it has been the setting for a Presidential address.

Also participating in the ceremony in the library's Coolidge Auditorium will be Douglas Southall Freeman, historian and chairman of the advisory committee for publication of "The Papers of Thomas Jefferson," General George C. Marshall, Harold W. Dodds, president of Princeton University, which is publishing "The Papers," and Verner W. Clapp, Acting Librarian of Congress.

Admission to the ceremony is by invitation only.

Julian P. Boyd, Princeton University librarian, and editor of the monumental work, said yesterday the series, when completed, "will be the completest edition of any President's writings, and probably in volume the largest collection of any American's works."

"The Papers," second volume of which is scheduled for publication in November, will include the 18,400 existing letters written by Jefferson, who lived from 1743 to 1826, and in full or summarized, an estimated 25,000 letters written to him, as well as Jefferson's special writings on a variety of subjects. Publication is expected to be completed in 1963.

Bronze Age Relics Found in Israel Excavations

Tel Aviv, Israel, May 16 (AP).—Digging by archeologists at three sites here has turned up evidence of ancient settlements dating to the early Bronze Age.

Israel's Department of Antiquities today announced the discovery of a terra cotta figurine of a naked guard and fragments of several others.

At another site near Tel Aviv Harbor diggers uncovered a tomb of the Hyksos period of the Age of Patriarchs. Two skeletons, pots and bronze pins were found.

Among four scarabs uncovered one was inscribed with the name of a pharaoh.

State Party Rule Hinges On Primary

Philadelphia, May 16 (AP).—Governor James H. Duff and his running mates took substantial leads tonight on returns from Pennsylvania's red-hot Republican primary election.

The vote for Republican United States Senator from 3597 of 8347 precincts:

James H. Duff, 517,174.
John C. Kunkel, 164,440.

John S. Fine, 432,318.
Jay Cooke, 260,250.
Charles Scott Williams, 15,953.

(Includes all 1390 precincts in Philadelphia and 99 of 1063 precincts in Alleghany County—Pittsgurgh.)

In the Democratic gubernatorial contest, Richardson Dilworth, Philadelphia city treasurer and the organization-slated candidate rolled up an early lead. Not expected to face much competition, Dilworth had 142,416 votes to 12,632 for Henry A. Morris, Schuylkill County attorney, and 14,952 for Clarance P. Bowers, Reading manufacturer who announced his withdrawal two weeks ago.

Duff was ahead from the first precinct reported. Fine lagged at

Suspect Held In Mystery of Slain Redhead

Morgantown, W. Va., May 16 (AP). State police at Morgantown today said a suspect in the Berkeley Springs murder of an unidentified red-haired woman had been arrested and taken to Morgan County for investigation.

Corpl. F. D. Roberts refused to identify the man. He had in his possession a woman's girdle, a scarf, and an album containing pictures of 100 women and "love letters." He admitted he was in the Berkeley Springs vicinity.

Long red hairs found on the man's clothing were to be checked in the laboratory at Berkeley Springs.

1000 Here Pray For Bishop Oxnam On 'Death' Report

More than 1000 persons at the annual meeting of the Washington Federation of Churches last night in the Mayflower Hotel gasped when the executive secretary read a message saying that G. Bromley Oxnam, Methodist Bishop of New York, was dead.

The report was false.

The gathering stood in a moment of silent prayer.

The Rev. Dr. Frederick E. Reissig, who made the announcement, said the message was brought to him by a bell boy.

Taft Charges Truman Goal Perils Nation

Senator Taft charged last night that President Truman's policies would bankrupt the Nation, convert it into a completely regimented "handout state" and possibly plunge it into World War III.

The Ohio Republican, taking to the radio to answer the charges of GOP "obstructionism" Mr. Truman made on his cross-country stumping tour, angrily raked the "political immorality" of the Administration.

He spoke of vote frauds in Kansas City and smuggling of secret documents in Washington. And he accused the President of a "promise-everything" policy that "will wreck the United States."

In an address to a four-network audience, Taft charged that Mr. Truman's 6400-mile-trip—"taken at your expense"—was part of a crusade for a "rubber-stamp Congress."

The Senator accepted the President's challenge to "come out for something and be a real opposition," voiced at Chicago.

The Republican Party, he said, stands for four-square resistance to communism, an "all-powerful armed force," real freedom of the individual, equality between business and labor, and "a return to the principles of thrift and sound fiscal policy on which this Nation was constructed."

"If we hope to progress in the future as we have in the past," Taft said, "we can only do so if we elect a free Congress, one which will carry out a program of progress based on the principles of liberty and justice and equality on which this Nation was founded."

The Democratic Eighty-first Congress, he declared, "has rejected the Truman program as definitely and conclusively as the Republican Eightieth."

The people, he said, are rightfully alarmed over "the uncertain basis of their prosperity" and, even more so, over "the threat of a third world war."

Public Confidence "Shaken"

"I am myself hopeful that it will never occur, but is is the foreign policy of the Democratic administrations which has made it possible," the Republican leader said.

"The political immorality of the Truman Administration," he said, "has shaken the confidence of the people in their Government."

He spoke scathingly of Mr. Truman's "nonpolitical trip", ended yesterday. He said the journey was taken at a time when "there was plenty to occupy him at home"—a railroad strike, a lagging legislative program, the foreign ministers' conference in London.

"But the President's purpose is now clear," he observed.

"He admits that he has been on a 10-day crusade to elect an Eighty-second Congress in November which will do his bidding in every respect. Every obstructionist will be removed."

"True, we have a Democratic Congress today, but it won't pass the socialistic measures which Mr. Truman has long advocated. . . .

"The general program of the Truman crusade is clear. Promise everyone everything and hope to back it up with Government money.

For Economic, Defense Study

Group Under American to Pool Atlantic Power Is Forecast

London, May 16 (NYHT).—The Foreign Ministers of the 12 North Atlantic Treaty powers are expected to set up a new committee to coordinate their defense and economic programs. This committee probably will be headed by an American civilian.

The names of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, now in civilian life; W. Averell Harriman, Ambassador at large for the Economic Cooperation Administration; John Foster Dulles, Republican adviser to the State Department, and Lewis W. Douglas, American Ambassador to Britain, are being mentioned in circles outside the conference.

The proposed committee is expected to bear the main responsibility for reconciling the demands of the military leaders with the civilian requirements of the 12 nations' political and financial leaders.

This means the committee's influence may be greater than that of almost any other international body. It would be authorized, subject to the views of member governments, to deal with issues that strike at the basis of national sovereignty. It presumably would assess and allocate defense and economic requirements as a unit, not on the basis of the needs of each country.

The committee, composed of high officials from each nation, would sit in permanent session. Members presumably would be deputies of their foreign ministers and would be empowered to deal with day-to-day problems.

Behind the support of the proposed committee is a growing feeling there is no time to lose because of the Soviet Union's known military preparations; there is no time to allow questions about sovereignty and politico-economic considerations to stand in the way of defense development.

This does not rule out further development of economic and social standards. But it seems clear that better living standards must be achieved only through heavily increased production. The primary effort must be in the military field and any surplus can be used for bettering living standards.

The foreign ministers, headed by Secretary of State Dean Acheson, held their second meeting today.

Action Urged On Home-Rule By Democrats

By Edward F. Ryan
Post Reporter

A new demand for House action on the District home rule bill was registered by the Democratic National Committee early yesterday before adjourning its Chicago meeting.

Officials returning to Washington reported that the committee wrote into its declaration of principles a section urging support for the petition now before the House to take the Senate-approved home rule bill away from the District Committee and pass it.

The District suffrage section of the committee's new declaration said:

"We urge that S. 1527 (the home rule bill), relating to suffrage in the District of Columbia, be discharged from committee and passed by the House of Representatives in concurrence with the Senate."

President Truman last year sent a similar appeal to the Capitol, but the anti-home-rule leadership of the House District Committee ignored the message. Instead, the committee tabled the Senate-approved bill, and the measure is still stuck in the committee.

In the House, however, Representative John F. Kennedy (D., Mass.) filed a petition to discharge the District Committee from further consideration of the bill, and the petition is now only 38 names short of the 218 needed to place the bill before the House.

Melvin D. Hildreth, District member of the Democratic National Committee, attended the Chicago sessions and led the move to include the District suffrage statement in the committee's declaration.

Hildreth said last night the vote for the District suffrage section was unanimous.

Commenting on the Chicago action, Hildreth said here "there is no question but what the Democratic Congressmen in the House now know that the Democratic National Committee has indicated its entire approval of the discharge petition."

U. S. Arms Aid Of $1.25 Billion More Is Goal

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

The Administration plans to go to Congress at the end of this month for another billion and a quarter dollars to help build up the military defenses of the non-Soviet world.

This will be the second annual installment of the program that Congress approved, reluctantly and after bitter controversy, last fall.

Unless Secretary Acheson unexpectedly changes his plans because of last-minute decisions in London, the request will be held to about the same over-all amount as Congress voted last year.

About Same As First Year

The first year's program provided a billion dollars' worth of weapons and supplies for eight of the countries that signed the North Atlantic Treaty.

It also included $211,370,000 for Greece and Turkey, $27,640,000 for Iran, Korea and the Philippines, and 75 million for use in non-Communist China or "the general area of China."

This time the request will be approximately the same for the Atlantic Pact countries, with Portugal to be included among the recipients. It will be smaller than last year's for Greece and Turkey, and the same for Iran, Korea and the Philippines.

Little to Be Carried Over

As for "the general area of China," which could mean Indonesia as well as the countries of the southeast Asia peninsula, the amount has not yet been determined, but probably will be about 100 million dollars.

Little, if any, of this year's money can be carried over to the next fiscal year. Although the European program was slow in starting, and the first shipments did not leave until January, the amounts committed last month were very large, and defense officials expect to have spent virtually all of the appropriated funds by the end of the fiscal year in June.

U. S. Chiefs Plan Visit to M'Arthur on Jap Treaty

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Defense Secretary Louis Johnson and Gen. Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, will go to the Orient next month for talks with Gen. Douglas MacArthur on a Japanese peace treaty.

The purpose of the visit is to formulate Department of Defense policy on negotiating such a treaty now and on what terms. The Joint Chiefs of Staff reportedly have been opposed at this time to a treaty that would end the occupation of Japan.

A secondary reason for the trip—which will also cover American bases in the Pacific and possibly the Philippines—is to give Secretary Johnson a first-hand view of the Pacific strategic picture. This will be his first visit to the Pacific islands and Japan.

Brief Announcement Here

Brief announcement that Johnson and Bradley would make the journey came from the Pentagon last night. It merely said that they would leave by air about June 11 and would inspect defense installations in the Far Eastern Command.

The trip will take about 10 days or two weeks. Honolulu, Guam and Okinawa are on the itinerary, officials said.

Lack of American policy on negotiating a Japanese peace treaty has prevented any serious discussion of the subject with non-Communist interested parties. State Department officials are said to believe in going ahead with negotiations looking toward a treaty involving eventual withdrawal of occupation troops and retention of military bases in Japan.

Military chiefs, however, believe one of the chief deterrents to Russian aggression is the presence of American troops in Japan and the certainty the Soviets would face a two-front war if they attack. They question whether a reliable political and military alliance could be made with an independent Japan at this time.

Occupation Called Unpopular

Some State Department officials feel MacArthur's military occupation is becoming very unpopular with the Japanese people, and if long continued would weaken the occupation and make it difficult for a Tokyo government to grant us permanent bases. Military men just back from Japan contend there is no evidence that Japanese sentiment is changing toward MacArthur.

Other officials feel that some firm and perhaps middle-ground American position may come out of the Johnson-Bradley visit and subsequent talks here. Possibly an arrangement something like that in Germany, with a lessening or ending of nonmilitary occupation controls and retention of troops there was suggested.

Hero Betrayed By Wife Here Freed in Killing

Amarillo, Tex., May 16 (U.P.)—Evald Johnson, 30-year-old Michigan war hero, was found innocent today in the tourist court murder of W. A. (Tex) Thornton, oilfield explosives expert.

The FBI immediately detained Johnson, charging him with unlawfully transporting Thornton's automobile across a State line.

Johnson testified Thornton picked up him and his blonde, 20-year-old wife and went to a motel. Later, Johnson said, he awoke and found his wife in bed with Thornton. He said Thornton drew a pistol. After that, Johnson said, he couldn't remember what happened, but he "guessed" he took away the gun and beat Thornton with it.

Baby-faced Mrs. Johnson also was accused of murder, but the charge was dismissed.

Truman Returns From Tour, Taunting GOP on Program

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

Hoarse but happy, President Truman yesterday returned to Washington from a 7000-mile, 57-speech "report to the people" tour unique in the history of politics.

Before riding into Washington, the President stopped at Cumberland, Md., to fling a parting challenge at the GOP to "come up with something better" than his Fair Deal platform.

There he pledged renewed legislative efforts to ease "tragic unemployment" that has hit Cumberland and some other American cities. In so doing, he lit another fire under his Eighty-first Congress—his principal unannounced aim on this trip.

To the Maryland crowd of more than 3000 he made his first indirect reference of the tour to the Senate investigation of the Communists-in-Government charges of Senator Joseph R. McCarthy (R., Wis.).

He did it by praising the "able job" he said Senator Millard E. Tydings (D., Md.) is doing on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Tydings is chairman of the special Foreign Relations subcommittee investigating McCarthy's charges.

Never once during the 16-State trip did the President make a frontal attack on Congress. What he did smacked of damning with faint praise. He commended its record as better than the Republican Eightieth, but made it pretty clear it wasn't quite up to snuff on his Fair Deal objectives and asked defeat of the "worst obstructionists."

Mr. Truman's dusty, 13-car special pulled into Union Station at 3:42 p. m. (EDT) and he motored to Blair House with his family. After about 20 minutes he went to work at his White House desk.

Earlier he strolled through the Strike Ends, Railroad Service Rapidly Returning to Normal

By Sam Stavisky

A peace formula ended the six-day walkout of locomotive firemen yesterday, and within a matter of hours the Nation's disrupted rail service was operating at near normal level.

Representatives of the carriers and union agreed to settlement terms under virtually continuous conciliation by the National Mediation Board.

At 3 a. m. 18,000 firemen who had been called out on five of the country's big roads were ordered back to work. All the strike-hit systems—Pennsylvania, Southern, New York Central, Santa Fe and Union Pacific—expected to be running on regular schedule by today.

Some 140,000 nonstriking rail employes, laid off as a result of the strike, were being called back to work. Similarly, about 60,000 furloughed workers were expected to be called back in those industries shut down by lack of rail transport.

The end of the strike means the return to work of several hundred area employes of the Southern, Pennsy and the Washington Terminal Co. The settlement also cancels Southern's plan to lay off 1200 office and yard employes in Alexandria and the District.

Spokesmen for the railroad industry and for the brotherhood expressed satisfaction with terms

The jubilee program was paid for with $250,000 in contributions.

His Advice Might Have Averted China Debacle, Lattimore Says

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

Scoffing at the notion that he was the "architect" of American policy in the Far East, Professor Owen Lattimore last night observed that it might have been better for all concerned if he had been.

The prime target for Senator McCarthy's accusations told a Baltimore dinner given in his honor that if the State Department had taken his advice in the past on China policy, both China and America might be in a healthier position.

He said, "It can be argued, with a high degree of probability, that if my suggestions had been adopted, China would not now be in the hands of the Communists, and the American position throughout Asia would not be so dangerously exposed to further successful Communist advances."

Lattimore's comments came in the course of a speech at a dinner arranged by the Johns Hopkins University faculty in his honor and in testimony of their belief in his loyalty.

Lattimore, head of the university's Walter Hines Page School of International Affairs, has been accused by McCarthy of being the "top Soviet espionage agent" in this country and—in milder terms—as "a bad policy risk."

McCarthy centered on the charge that Lattimore had influenced or

FEPC Vote Seen Friday In Senate

Post Reporter

FEPC supporters yesterday signed a petition to force a showdown vote Friday on whether the Senate can officially consider the controversial "civil rights" measure.

The cloture petition was circulated by Senate Majority Leader Scott W. Lucas (D., Ill.) and received 36 signatures—24 Republicans and 12 Democrats.

Lucas announced it would be filed today and that the crucial vote would be taken at 1 p. m. Friday. He urged that every Senator not in a hospital or bedridden at home be present to vote Friday, and his plea was joined in by Senate Minority Leader Kenneth S. Wherry (R., Neb.).

In order to secure cloture so the measure can be officially considered 64 votes will be necessary.

Should the necessary 64 votes be secured Friday, only the arguments against taking up the measure at all will be halted. When the bill is officially on the floor Southern Democrats will have another opportunity to filibuster against it.

If the Friday cloture motion fails, the Administration is expected to drop its FEPC fight for this session and attempt to lay blame for its failure in the civil rights fight it initiated at the door of the Republicans who supported the 64-vote rule last year.

If the cloture move goes through, GOP forces are expected to press for adoption of the voluntary FEPC bill introduced by Senator Robert Taft (R., Ohio), rather then the compulsory measure introduced by the Administration.

Senators Walter F. George (D., Ga.) and Spessard L. Holland (D., Fla.) yesterday spoke at length against the motion to take up the bill.

A three-year program of Federal school construction to aid overcrowded local school districts was approved yesterday by a House Labor subcommittee.

The program would cost an estimated 125 million dollars. It would provide added classrooms for children of Government employes on Federal installations that do not contribute taxes to local districts.

The subcommittee already had approved a companion measure providing Government assistance to these same "impacted" areas for maintenance and operation of existing schools. It recommended yesterday that both proposals be wrapped up in a single bill.

Meanwhile the chiefs of the Federal Children's Bureau urged Senators to increase aid to the States for the schooling of handicapped children.

Miss Katharine F. Lenroot, who heads the bureau in the Social Security Administration, made the plea. She indorsed a bill to enable the Office of Education to step up its activities for helping handicapped children.

Legislation before a Senate Labor and Public Welfare subcommittee would:

Authorize appropriations of four million dollars for the fiscal year beginning July 1, eight million dollars for the next year, 12 million dollars for the year following and 16 million dollars annually thereafter for grants to States.

It also would provide for distribution to be made on a matching basis to States that submit plans for special educational services for handicapped children that meet the approval of the United States Commissoner of Education.

Real Atomic Toys Are Being Produced

Oak Ridge, Tenn., May 16 (AP).—Comes now real atomic toys for the youngsters.

The Atomic Energy Commission said today it is shipping radioactive isotopes to A. G. Gilbert Manufacturing Co. of New Haven, Conn., for use in making atomic toys.

The ray-emitting isotope is zinc 65, described by atomic scientists as a "harmless" isotope, or element, with a half-life of 250 days.

Prices Cutting Use of Coffee, Hearing Told

High prices are driving coffee drinkers to milk and tea, a New York coffee merchant told Congress yesterday.

In spite of the warning that they are "pricing coffee out of the American market," Brazilians are betting that coffee prices will continue high.

Angus Mackey, who represents many Brazilian coffee men, told a Senate Agricultural subcommittee, headed by Senator Guy M. Gillette (D., Iowa), that coffee consumption has dropped 50 percent in some areas in a year.

"I have tried to warn the coffee producers that they are weaning Americans from coffee drinking," he said. "The price is artificially high. There is no real shortage of coffee." Mackey blamed last fall's coffee boom on "panic buying" in this country.

Committee investigators furnished the committee with the list of foreign coffee speculators on the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange.

These showed that foreigners held 366,750 pounds of coffee, or almost half of the total of 740,000 pounds, in "open" contracts.

Man Guilty in Traffic Death

James L. Martin, 22, 1932 11th st. nw., was convicted of negligent homicide yesterday in connection with the traffic death April 5 of Lucie Boury, 70, 1333 8th st. nw.

Martin was held under $1000 bond pending presentence investigation by the probation office. He faces a maximum penalty of one year in jail and a $1000 fine.

Mrs. Boury was knocked down at Connecticut ave. and Morrison st. nw. at 5 p. m. by a florist truck driven by Martin. She was admitted to Emergency Hospital but released at 9 p. m.

At her home later that night, Mrs. Boury became unconscious and was readmitted to the hospital, testimony showed. She never regained consciousness and a post mortem examination showed the woman died of a cerebral hemorrhage. Defense Attorney Louis A. Zuckerman claimed that lack of adequate treatment may have caused the woman's death rather than the accident.

Assistant United States Attorney Joseph Sommers prosecuted.

Withholding Tax Approved On Dividends

The House Ways and Means Committee voted 16-to-9 yesterday to impose a 10 percent withholding tax on corporation dividends. It then rejected President Truman's request for an increase in inheritance and gift taxes estimated to produce 400 million dollars a year.

The withholding on dividends, if it becomes law, would put no new tax obligations on any taxpayers.

Instead, it is designed to crack down on tax dodgers. Sponsors estimate it will result in collection of about 150 million dollars a year from those who now fail to report dividends when they make out their income tax returns.

Rejection of the President's proposal for new estate and gift taxes—shouted down without a committee roll call—raised new doubts that Congress will produce a tax bill that Mr. Truman will approve.

The Administration had proposed that estate and gift tax exemptions be decreased and the tax rates increased.

Still awaiting committee action is one big revenue proposal by the President—that an additional 650 million dollars tax be put on corporations by raising the corporation income tax rate from 38 to 42 percent.

There is no proposal before the committee to raise individual income taxes.

Representative Mills (D., Ark.) proposed the dividend withholding tax when the committee learned from the Internal Revenue Bureau that $1,400,000,000 of the approximately $8,000,000,000 paid annually in corporation dividends never shows up in individual income tax statements.

Veteran's Bride Loses Fight to Remain in U. S.

New York, May 16 (AP)—Mrs. Ellen Knauff, German bride of an American veteran, today lost her court battle to remain in this country and is subject to immediate deportation.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals upheld a lower court decision that held that immigration authorities can deport Mrs. Knauff despite pending congressional action to permit her admission.

"This means that Mrs. Knauff will be immediately deported, since she has no further recourse to the courts," United States Attorney Irving Saypol said.

The day commemorates Christ's ascension into heaven 40 days after His Resurrection.

E. Capitol St. Bridge Voted By Committee

A House-approved bill for speeding construction of a new bridge over the Anacostia River at East Captol st. was approved unanimously yesterday by the Senate District Committee.

The committee wrote one change into the bill upon recommendation of Senator Lester C. Hunt (D., Wyo.) so that the bridge could be placed "in the vicinity of" instead of "in the line of" East Capitol st. The House bill called for building the bridge in line with East Capitol st.

Also approved by the committee and forwarded to the Senate was a bill authorizing the District Board of Public Welfare to assign additional girls to the National Training School for Girls.

In another action District Chairman Matthews M. Neely (D., W. Va.,) named a three-member subcommittee to review testimony on proposed amendments to three labor-sponsored bills on which the full District Committee had hearings.

The subcommittee includes Senators Edward L. Leahy (D., R. I.), Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.) and Robert C. Hendrickson (R., N. J.). The bills call for increasing unemployment compensation benefits, for hiking child labor age minimums, and for applying the women's and minors' minimum wage law to men.

Senator Olin D. Johnston (D., S. C.) proposed that the Senate District Committee approve a House-passed bill for letting hotels and restaurants obtain a special $250 annual license to sell drinks on credit.

Several members asked Corporation Counsel Vernon E. West about the District government's view. When he reported that the District Commissioners and Alcoholic Beverage Control Board opposed the bill, Senator Johnston moved to postpone action on the measure indefinitely.

Johnston said that as a teetotaler he found no objection to the bill, but felt that if there were to be opposition, the bill should be given further study.

Meanwhile, the House approved and sent to the Senate a bill to amend the 144-year-old charter of the Presbyterian Congregation of Georgetown. The amendments would let the trustees fix the annual meeting date and increase from $3000 to $25,000 the limit on annual income from church-owned property.

'Inertia' Seen As Delaying Slum Cleanup

The country is not yet sold on the new national slum clearance and urban redevelopment program, a top Housing and Home Agency official asserted last night.

Carl Feis, chief of community planning and development branch of the agency's slum clearance program, told city planners attending the National Citizens Conference on Planning at the Statler Hotel that the possibilities of vast urban redevelopment "have not got down to the people."

Said the Federal official: "We have submitted ourselves to one of the strongest vested interests, that's inertia."

Selling Job Needed

The Housing and Home Finance Agency and the Nation's planners, said Feis, have "a big selling job to do and it cannot be done from Washington or by technical planning officials in the local communities."

He said the task of putting across the urban redevelopment program, as provided by the Housing Act of 1949, must be done by citizen groups "who know how to get to slum tenants and business interests."

Feis was one of three speakers in a panel discussion on slum clearance and slum prevention.

The Federal official stressed repeatedly that his agency had no intention of even attempting to plan local attacks on blighted areas.

"Our major interest is to assist localities in developing overall city plans, locally arrived at. We will not make the plans for you," he told the planners.

"Bound to Fail"

This thought was underscored by Sherwood Reeder, city manager of Richmond, Va., another panel speaker, who declared "over-all Federal planning for slum clearance is bound to fail."

In a later discussion period, Gen. U. S. Grant 3d, former chairman of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, posed the District's problem of what to do when home owners' in prospective slum clearance sites are "strong enough" to defeat a go-ahead on the project.

N. S. Keith, director of HHFA's slum clearance program and panel moderator, commented that his agency's "most difficult public relations problem is presented by such home owners' fears."

Liberty Bell Rings at Capitol To Open Treasury Bond Drive

An American Liberty Bell sent 86 of its mellow notes rolling yesterday across the Capitol plaza where Presidents are inaugurated.

The bell, a one-ton replica of the original but with a painted-on crack, was rung to start the Treasury's Independence Drive to sell $7,500,000 worth of E bonds in the District by July 4.

At 11:10 a. m. the 679th Air Force Band from Andrews Field, led by Warrant Officer Frank A. Reed, tarted playing a song, Tallulah Bankhead, actress, throatily sounded a new note in inaugurals. She turned with warm welcome to Senator Margaret Chase Smith (R., Me.) and told about the time she heard Mrs. Smith suggested as candidate for Vice President. Miss Bankhead said she was going to run against Mrs. Smith on the slogan "Tallulah for Vice," until she figured Mrs. Smith's slogan would be "Margaret for Advice," so she gave up the idea.

Mrs. Smith joined her in appealing for support of the bond drive. So did Representative John W. McCormack (D., Mass.) House Majority Leader, Edward C. Baltz, chairman of the District Savings Bonds Division of the Treasury, and Bill Herson of WRC, master of ceremonies. Soloist Kay DeWitt joined in the appeal by singing "The Star Spangled Banner."

The bell ringing then began, with Miss Bankhead in the anchor position, assisted by Senator Smith, and Messrs. Baltz and Herson.

Blacksmith, 82, Fined $300 in Numbers Case

Alfred Valentine, 82-year-old Alexandria blacksmith, was fined $300 and given a 30-day suspended sentence on two numbers game charges in Alexandria Police Court yesterday. He pleaded guilty. The violations occurred at his home, 802 Wolfe st., Alexandria, on April 29.

Government Funds Pay Farm Agents To Aid Exclusive 'Rings,' Congress Told

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

Uncle Sam is paying farm agents to give exclusive aid to small groups of well-to-do farmers, the House Agriculture Committee learned yesterday.

This disclosure was one of several that came at a hearing on a bill by Representative Walter K. Granger (D., Utah) to divorce the Cooperative Extension Service from the Farm Bureau organizations. Others included:

1. That some States, including Maryland and Virginia, pay far more to the "cooperative" extension service than the Federal Government, while others, such as Illinois, Iowa, etc., where the Farm Bureau is powerful, pay in far less.

2. That the Farm Bureau, by small contribution to the extension service in some States virtually forces farmers to join the bureau in order to get the services of Government-paid county agents.

Representative as Member

The committee's newest member, Representative George H. Christopher (D., Mo.) told the committee he was a member of a Missouri "farmers' ring" that got such Government-paid aid.

There are "42 Balanced Farmers' Rings" in Missouri, Christopher said. "In our ring we contribute $50 to $75 apiece each year," he explained. The Government then employs an assistant county agent who gives his sole atention to that "ring." "You can call it a ring, a clique, an organization, or whatever you like," Christopher said. "We like it."

Chairman Harold D. Cooley (D., N. C.) commented that he had recently learned that similar deals had been put over in his State.

Then turning to Minburn L. Wilson, head of the Extension Service, he demanded: "What authority do you have to take Federal money and use it to give a small group of farmers exclusive service?"

Law Permits Deal

The law, which permits a close association between the Farm Bureau and the Extension Service is the law under which the Missouri "rings" operate.

Wilson, William H. Martin, dean of agriculture at Rutgers University; Dean Harry L. Brown of the University of Georgia, and national and State officials of the Farmers Union all urged that the present relationship between Extension and the Farm Bureau be stopped.

In Illinois, it was pointed out, the offices of the Government-paid Extension Service are in buildings owned by the county Farm Bureaus. The same buildings house Farm Bureau insurance companies, oil companies, building and farm machinery companies, etc. In order to get the benefits of the Government-paid county agent the farmers are virtually forced to join the Farm Bureau and the various business groups of the bureau, witnesses said.

Wilson caused commotion when he furnished a list showing how some States contribute much less for cooperative extension work than others.

The extension work cost Virginia $1,154,137, which more than matched $921,419 that the Government paid in that State. The Federal Government paid only $291,832 for cooperative extension in Maryland, while the State paid $556,162—almost twice as much. However, a comparatively rich State, Kentucky, got $1,146,381 from the Federal Government and paid in only $662,492 in State funds. Mississippi paid in $333,802 less than the Government, Missouri, $332,084 less; Illinois, $338,057 less, and Georgia, $376,751 less than Uncle Sam.

Water Vapor Band 5-10 Miles Thick Found 40 Miles Up

Pasadena, Calif., May 16 (AP).—A band of water vapor 5 to 10 miles thick has been discovered at an altitude of about 40 miles, says Dr. David R. Bates of the University of London.

The vapor, swept up from the earth, never has a chance to return and indicates an escape of moisture from the earth's surface, Dr. Bates told 80 scientists attending an upper-atmosphere symposium at the California Institute of Technology.

Under the influence of ultraviolet rays, the water molecules break up into hydrogen and oxygen, he said.

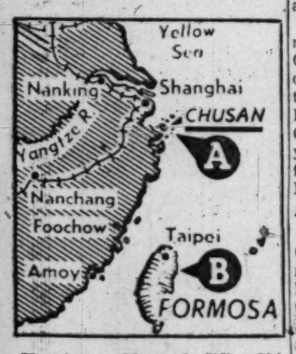
Helicopter Is Tested As Invasion Weapon

By Nationalists

Evacuation Of Chusans Announced



Hongkong, May 16 (U.P.).—Chinese Nationalist troops gave up the Chusan Islands without a fight today, reducing the territory of their dwindling nation to the single key island of Formosa.

In Taipei, Nationalist President Chiang Kai-shek said "invulnerable" Formosa would be the base for a counter-offensive" against Communist China. He promised complete victory over the Reds within five years.

At the same time, the Nationalist Central News Agency published another Chiang speech in which Chiang promised to "make the supreme sacrifice" if the Reds capture his last stronghold.

The Chusans had been the base for the air, and naval blockade of Shanghai, one of the few effective features of the Nationalist "rearguard action."

The official announcement said the Chusans had been abandoned "to meet the needs of over-all strategy in our anti-Communist war."

Private sources on Formosa said, however, that the threat of Red China's Russian-strengthened sea and air power dictated the decision.

Evacuation of the Chusans also deprives the Nationalists of the bases from which their planes had been hammering new Red airfields in Chekiang and Kiangsu provinces.

Gen. Chou Chih-jou, Nationalist chief-of-staff, said 150,000 troops, with their equipment, and an unspecified number of civilians had been withdrawn from the islands.

Transport helicopters carrying assault troops from dispersed ships to enemy shores give the "greatest promise" for successful amphibious invasions in another war, Gen. Clifton B. Cates said last night.

In a radio interview on the ABC "Time for Defense" series, Marine Corps Commandant Cates said such tactics are being tested by the Marines to meet the problems raised by "the threat of atomic attack."

Robert Sherrod, Time magazine military correspondent, asked Cates whether the A-bomb ruled out future amphibious operations—the Marines' specialty. Gen. Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, told Congress last year he felt the atomic bomb made future large-scale invasions like Normandy unlikely.

Attack Not Obsolete

"First and foremost," replied Cates, "the atomic bomb does not make the amphibious attack obsolete. It will undoubtedly change the manner in which these attacks are made, but it by no means makes them impossible. . . .

"We are working on a great many ideas. The one that holds the greatest promise—and the one I can discuss here—is the use of transport helicopters for moving the landing force from the ships to the shore.

"In this concept, we propose to have transport helicopters load the landing force and take off from ships which are still 50 to 100 miles at sea. Under the protection of combat aircraft, these helicopters can transport the landing force ashore while most of the shipping stays dispersed at sea."

Quantico Develops Tactics

Cates said the Marine Corps Schools at Quantico are developing the tactics and techniques for the new concept just "as we did for the conventional form of amphibious attack in the years between the wars."

The Leatherneck chief said there are 30,000 officers and men in the Fleet Marine Force "ready to move literally anytime, anywhere, by any means."

"We could start loading for overseas movement just as soon as the transports are put alongside the dock," he added. "If air movement is required, we could start loading planes very soon after they are put down on the strip."

The Fleet Marine Force, Cates said, is divided into two parts, each an "air ground team" consisting of a division and air wing at reduced strength.

Former President Of Haiti on Way To French Exile

Dumarsais Estime, ousted as Haitian president May 10, is flying to Ne wYork today from Tampa, Fla. The Haitian Embassy said he will go to France later.

The Embassy said he is not going into exile but is "absenting himself from the country for a while."

Estime was thrown out of office by a group of top-ranking army officers. The move followed agitation over a proposed constitutional amendment that would have allowed him to run for reelection.

Accompanied by his family, Estime is traveling aboard a Haitian air force plane piloted by Maj. Edouard Roy, chief of the Haitian air force.

The Embassy said the ruling junta had told Estime he could remain in Haiti and be accorded protection.

"He preferred to absent himself from the country for a while and go to France," one official said.

Indianapolis, May 16 (AP).—The City Council has voted to sell a secluded, wooded spot purchased in the early twenties as a bird sanctuary. A councilman said he found most of the billing and cooing was done in parked cars.

Oregon Upholds Suit by Minor Against Parent

Salem, Oreg., May 16 (AP).—The Oregon Supreme Court upset a 59-year-old rule of law today and held 4 to 3 that a minor child can sue a parent for damages.

The decsion, which has its roots in a truck wreck following a drunken celebration of the end of the war with Japan, awards $5000 damages for a father's responsibility for the death of his son.

The rule that a minor child can't sue his parents for damages first was given in 1891 by the Mississippi Supreme Court.

The father George W. Parker, and the son, Billie Eugene Parker, were killed in 1945 when a truck driven by the father plunged over an embankment.

The administrator of the boy's estate sued to establish liability of an insurance company. The money will go to the boy's mother, who was left with eight children to support.

Is This Hitler's Last Picture?

END WAS NEAR—The Associated Press yesterday distributed two pictures that the Berlin magazine Illustrated Telegraf printed and described as the last ever taken of Hitler. They were said to have been made at the same time, about April 20, 1945. Above picture depicts Adolf Hitler, his overcoat collar pushed up, accompanied by SS Obergruppenfuehrer Julius Schaub, surveying war damage to the Reich Chancellery in Berlin—10 days before the Fuehrer was reported dead in his air-raid bunker. The pictures are attributed to a representative of Hitler's personal photographer, Heinrich Hoffman

Inonu's Party Concedes Loss In Election

Ankara, May 16 (U.P.).—The government offered to resign today, conceding the overwhelming defeat in Sunday's general elections of the Republican People's Party (PRP), which had dominated Turkey for 27 years.

President Ismet Inonu, leader of the PRP, refused the cabinet resignations, and the leader of the victorious Democrat Party asked the PRP to remain in power until Monday, when the new Parliament will elect a new president to take Inonu's place.

Nearly complete official returns showed the Democrats are sure of 380 seats in Parliament. The PRP had won only 56 seats, with 51 contests undecided.

Inonu himself, who had conceded defeat in an Ankara district, also faces the possible loss of his seat as deputy from Malatya, his home town. A defeat there would eliminate him from Parliament as well as the presidency.

Democrat leaders predicted Supreme Court Justice Halil Ozyoruk would be Turkey's new President.

U. S. Praises Turkey For Democratic Ballot

The State Department yesterday hailed the Turkish election as "an inspiring victory for democracy."

In a statement broadcast to Turkey by the Voice of America, the department praised the leaders of the People's Party for giving their people "freedom of choice" after 600 years of absolutism and a long period of one-party rule.

The statement expressed confidence that under the new government Turkey would hold firmly to its new democratic traditions and its close friendship with the United States.

By King Farouk

Princess' Marriage, Title Voided

Cairo, May 16 (AP).—King Farouk took the title of Princess away from his 19-year-old sister Fatha today because she married a Coptic Christian commoner in California.

This climaxed decisions earler in the day by his royal council ruling her marriage was void and that she must separate at once from Riad Ghali, 31, her mother's political secretary.

The council decreed, too, that she and Queen Mother [illegible] living in San Francisco, should be put under authority of an [illegible] custodian who will impound their vast properties. It ordered Princess Faika, who is with the Queen [illegible] in California, to return to Egypt.

[illegible]'s bridegroom is a member of the Coptic faith that prevails largely in Upper Egypt, the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan and Ethiopia. In condemning Fathia's marriage to Ghali, King Farouk acted both as the monarch and as head of the Moslem faith in Egypt. Islamic law forbids marriage of Moslem women with non-Moslems.

Fathia and Ghali were married with Queen Nazli's approval in a secret civil ceremony at San Francisco April 25.

Fathia and Ghali have been living in separate hotel suites at San Francisco hoping for Farouk's blessing so they could go ahead wit ha Moslem wedding.

(At San Francisco, the Princess said "We still intend to go through with the Moslem ceremony.")

UOPWA Calls for $40 Weekly Minimum Pay

Atlantic City, N. J., May 16 (U.P.).—The United Office and Professional Workers of America, representing 30,000 white-collar workers, today approved a general wage policy calling for a base minimum pay of $40 a week.

The policy, which also pledged the UOPWA to fight for union shop contracts, a shorter work week and general pay increases, was adopted at the union's first national convention since it was expelled from the national CIO for alleged sympathy with Communist causes.

Russian Press Sees New U. S. Border Threat

Moscow, May 16 (AP).—The Soviet press charged today that American specialists are building military roads and making maps in Afghanistan, a southern neighbor of Russia.

The Tass news agency reported the alleged activities in a dispatch from Tehran, Iran, just after making public a Soviet note to the Iranian government charging other United States experts are engaged in aerial photographic surveys in northern Iran under the guise of exploring for oil.

The dispatch and the note made it clear that the Russians hold the United States is carrying on intelligence work close to the southern Russian borders.

The note that Iran "eliminate the abnormal position" that could "create a danger to the frontiers of the USSR."

The news dispatch said the government of Afghanistan renewed a contract in January with the Morrison Knudsen Co., an American firm, for the construction of an irrigation system in the Arghandab and Helmand River valleys. The valleys are in southwest and central Afghanistan.

In Tehran, where the Iranian government confirmed it had received a note protesting the employment of foreigners in oil explorations, it was pointed out that in a treaty of 1921 Russia reserved the right to enter Iran if she feels her frontiers are endangered.

Iranians said the explorations are being conducted by the Iranian Oil Company, Ltd., an Iranian-owned corporation, in various parts of the country under the government's seven-year plan of economic development.

In Washington, a State Department spokesman said the Russian charges were "utter and complete nonsense." He said the Iranian Oil Company had sought bids from American companies to make aerial surveys for mineral resources, but had awarded no contract.

Father Gives Life As Well as Blood For Ailing Son

Oakland, Calif., May 16 (AP).—A father gave his life to save his son's here today, following a blood-exchange operation.

The son, 11-year-old Robert Bruce Lawrence, probably will recover. He has nephrosis, a kidney disease, and needed a complete change of blood.

Sidney E. Lawrence, 40, the father, volunteered for the operation. He was told there was danger to the donor because of foreign material he is taking into his own system.

"Go ahead," he said.

"He died thinking he had saved his son's life. That was a wonderful thought to him," said Mrs. Norma Gene Lawrence, the widow.

Lie Has Talk With Envoy Of Red China

Moscow, May 16 (U.P.)—United Nations Secretary General Trygve Lie conferred today with Chinese Ambassador Wang Chia-hsiang, and foreign observers linked their meeting with attempts to end the Security Council deadlock by admitting Communist China.

The U. N. information center announced that Lie received Wang at noon at the National Hotel. Lie has proposed to terminate the deadlock by the admission of a Peiping representative.

As a result of his talks with Premier Josef Stalin and other Soviet leaders, Lie knows precisely the Soviet standpoint and whether a practical compromise can be worked out. Lie's trip here may be considered a success from that point alone, if for no other reason.

Lie kept all diplomatic sources guessing about what happened at last night's meeting at the Kremlin, where he talked for 90 minutes with the Soviet Union's most eminent men in the field of foreign policy. He scheduled a Wednesday press conference on the meeting, but warned reporters not to expect anything "sensational."

News of 'Cut' in Reparations Is Financial Blow to Germans

Berlin, May 16 (NYHT).—Germans received shocking news from Moscow today that Prime Minister Josef Stalin, as a goodwill gesture, had decided to cut east Germany's reparations payments by half.

Those who had knowledge of certain facts calculated that the people of east Germany will have to deliver to Russia 74 percent or roughly three fourths of their current industrial production for the next 15 years.

For it developed that the Soviet claim to 10 billion dollars in reparations from all Germany had been imposed on the Soviet-occupied zone of east Germany, representing roughly a third of the country.

Stalin said east Germany will have paid $3,658,000,000 by the end of 1950; then he announced the outstanding balance of $6,342,000,000 would be cut by half.

The amount now due—$3,171,000,000—must be paid from current industrial production over 15 years, beginning in 1951.

British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin has declared that Russia had actually taken seven billion dollars worth of reparations from east Germany alone by 1947. Since that time it is known Russia took an additional $3,700,000,000 in goods from current production.

Dulles Calls for Unity In U. S. Strategy Planning

New York, May 16 (AP).—John Foster Dulles tonight urged creation of a single "national planning staff" to mobilize America's resources for the cold war with Russia.

"Soviet communism has won great victories and it holds the initiative," Dulles said.

"Soviet communism is rapidly advancing its program of encirclement and building up its manpower, natural resources and military and industrial power so that, in the end, we may be subject to easy conquest by open war."

Dulles warned against waiting "too long." He said that by sticking to peacetime methods, this country is suffering from "extravagant waste of top-level time," long delays, and "often contradictory, puny or negative results."

All this stems from the fact that the United States now has "a score or more boards of strategy," Dulles said, in contrast to the Kremlin's, tightly organized power.

C. N. Waynick Will Organize Point 4 Setup

Capus M. Waynick, North Carolina newspaper editor, politician and diplomat, is to be the first director of the 35-million-dollar Point Four program of technical help to backward areas abroad.

Waynick

A former Democratic national committeeman, active for two decades in the public affairs of his State, Waynick is now Ambassador to Nicaragua. He will keep his diplomatic post and title while being detailed to the State Department for a few months to get the Point Four program established.

A Senate-House conference earlier this week approved a bill authorizing 35 million dollars for technical help to underdeveloped areas in all parts of the world. The program gets its name from President Truman's mention of it, in his inaugural address last year, as the fourth of four major elements of American foreign policy.

Bill Due in House Today

Chairman John Kee (D., W. Va.) of the House Foreign Affairs Committee expects to bring the compromise bill before the House for final approval. After the Senate approves it and the President signs it. Point Four still faces a hard fight to get appropriations in the two houses.

Waynick, 50, was a reporter on North Carolina dailies and editor of the Greensboro Daily Record before enlisting as a private in the first World War. After the war, he was publisher of the Record and then, for 12 years, editor of the High Point Daily Enterprise.

Held Many State Posts

He held many State posts during the New Deal years, among them the chairmanship of the North Carolina Highway and Public Works Commission and of the State Planning Board.

As director of the North Carolina Social Hygiene Society he has shown an interest in health activities, which will be an important part of the Point Four program. The new act of Congress provides for "an exchange of technical knowledge and skills" including the teaching and training of foreigners in public health.

Waynick said recently he might run for Governor of North Carolina in 1952.

under stiff European pressure to increase the second year's request, partly because of what Secretary Acheson recently called signs of growing Soviet "boldness." But there is a firm belief here that the Europeans can use more of their own money, materials and men on rearmament than they are using now.

Acheson and his advisers are stressing this belief at the present London meetings of the North Atlantic Foreign Ministers. They believe most of the western European countries have made such headway toward economic recovery that they can afford to spend more on defense without impairing their standards of living.

Britain and the Netherlands are already spending about 7½ percent of their national incomes on defense, and probably cannot be expected to do more. But, according to figures in the Economist of London, Belgium, a great manufacturing country, is spending only 3.2 percent of her income on defense, France 4.9 percent, Norway 4½ percent and Denmark only 2 percent.

The Belgian retort has been that much of the British and Dutch military spending has gone into distant colonial areas, whereas Belgium's is all in Europe. Still, American officials are confident that the Belgians and other Europeans can increase their spending appreciably without forcing the United States to step up its rate of military help at this time.

After all, it is argued here, the rearmament of western Europe is a step-by-step and year-by-year effort toward an eventual goal of 30 full armed divisions. If Europe does as much for itself as it can afford, American officials believe it can reach its goal within four years without sacrificing economic recovery in the process.

The same amount of American money will not produce the same amount of armaments for Europe as it did this year. The reason is that much of this year's expenditure has gone for surplus equipment, which could be supplied at bargain-basement prices.

Next year's American arms for the non-Soviet world will have to come from reserves or from new manufacturers. But the hope is that more modern weapons with greater fire-power and efficiency can make up for the smaller quantities.

One troublesome question, not yet decided, is whether to ask authority for the President to send arms to unnamed countries in the event of attack or threat of attack. Last year Congress balked at what it called "blank check" authority, and it gave the President only enough leeway to use the 75-million-dollar China fund "in the general area of China."

The existing bill also gives permission to switch up to 5 percent of the aid from Europe to the Greek-Turkish area or to the Iran-Korea-Philippines group. The Administration would like this permission widened to allow a 10 percent switch of funds if necessary.

It remains to be seen whether Congress will be any friendlier to the coming request than it was the last time. The official hope is that with the cold war growing warmer, and with sharper awareness of Soviet pressure and its dangers, both parties on Capitol Hill will approve the second instalment with comparatively little trouble.

Britain Asked To Get Behind Pooling Plan

London, May 16 (U.P.) — The "United Europe Movement," an unofficial organization headed by Winston Churchill, tonight urged Britain to indorse France's plan to merge European coal and steel industries.

A statement asked the Labor government "to announce immediately that it is prepared to play its full part . . . in working out methods for the implementation of (French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman's) proposals."

West German Cabinet Indorses Schuman Plan

Bonn, Germany, May 16 (U.P.) — Western Germany's 13-man cabinet today approved "in principle" a French plan to pool the coal and steel resources of the two nations.

Meanwhile, former French Premier Paul Reynaud arrived here, apparently to open preliminary discussions of the pooling plan.

Anti-Ober Act Approved by Labor Body

Hagerstown, Md., May 16 (AP).—A flock of resolutions on a large variety of subjects—two directed against Maryland's Ober law—were submitted for membership approval today at the Maryland-District of Columbia Federation of Labor convention.

Twenty-four resolutions introduced by member unions were readied for action by the 400-odd delegates.

The International Ladies Garment Workers Union sponsored one measure calling for the AFL groups to support efforts to have the Ober anti-subversive act scrapped at the November referendum.

The Office Employes Union also came up with a resolution urging repeal of the act which it accused of having "anti-labor bias."

Among the resolutions introduced today was one from the Allegany Trades Council of Cumberland, which said local measures to cope with unemployment there were near exhaustion and called on the Federal Government for intensified aid to the area.

The Hotel and Restaurant Workers International Alliance authored a measure urging congressional enactment of a fair employment practices law.

The Central Labor Union of Washington urged a congressional amendment of the GI Bill of Rights to declare manual and technical trade courses as "avocational or recreational" in character.

The resolution noted that "responsible employers" pointed out that such veteran trainees acquired no really valuable trade skills through those courses.

Czech Quits as U. N. Delegate, Asks Truman for Asylum Here

Lake Success, May 16 (AP).—Vladimir Houdek resigned today as Czechoslovak delegate to the United Nations, severed all ties with his Communist-dominated homeland and appealed to President Truman for asylum in the United States.

He also sent a cable to Prime Minister Stalin warning that it is impossible in the long run to force Russian-style communism on European countries.

Houdek said in his telegram to Mr. Truman that one reason he quit was to protest harassment of American diplomats by Czechoslovakia.

The 38-year-old diplomat told reporters he has no money and has made no plans. He said he would have to leave his present home since the rent is paid by the Czechoslovak government.

In a statement, Houdek protested against Russia's "Rokossovsky" tactics in esatern Europe. He was referring to the inclusion of Soviet Marshal Konstantin Rokossovsky in the Polish politburo and to the reports of Communist Party purges in Loland.

As the statement was handed out here, Houdek remained at home in Great Neck, where police guarded him, his wife and two little daughters.

His resignation had been expected in some U. N. circles since Vladimir Clements resigned as foreign minister a month ago. Clementis was known here as Houdek's sponsor.

Houdek was scheduled to sail tonight on the Queen Elizabeth for home. He had made plans for sailing, but said in his statement that information received from Prague 48 hours ago made him change.

Houdek has lived in the United States five years. He has followed the Soviet line of walking out of the U. N. meetings since January 10.

Church Federation Elects Dr. Cranford

At Asbury

Methodist Conference Opens Today

About 2000 persons are expected to attend the tenth session of the Washington Annual Conference of the Methodist Church which opens at Asbury Methodist Church, 11th and K sts. nw., today.

The program will conclude with an all-day meeting at Constitution Hall on Sunday.

The Rev. Dr. Robert M. Williams, pastor of the host church, said that the meeting Sunday marks the first time Constitution Hall has been leased to a Negro group.

Dr. Williams estimated that more than 4000 persons will attend the all-day session, which will include a morning worship service, choral recital, ordination of new ministers and reading of pastoral appointments for the coming year.

Bishop Alexander P. Shaw, of the Baltimore area of the Methodist Church will preside at the sessions.

On Saturday at 2:30 p. m. an historical pageant "Advancing Through the Ages," celebrating the 87th anniversary of the founding of the conference, will be held at Uline Arena.

The Washington conference is part of the Central Jurisdiction of the Methodist Church. It represents some 45,000 Negro Methodists in the District of Columbia, Virginia, West Virginia and part of Maryland and Pennsylvania.

The Rev. Dr. Clarence W. Cranford, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, last night was unanimously elected president of the Washington Federation of Churches.

He succeeds the Right Rev. Angus Dun, Episcopal Bishop of Washington, who has held the post for two years.

Election of new officers was part of the annual meeting of the federation at the Mayflower Hotel. More than 1000 persons attended the session, which marked the completion of 30 years of work by the federation.

Other officers were elected as follows:

Vice presidents: Woolsey Hall, Fifteenth Street Presbyterian; Mrs. Joy Elmer Morgan, Hamline Methodist; the Rev. Dr. Edward L. R. Elson, pastor of National Presbyterian and E. Donald Preston, First Congregational Church.

Treasurer, George Ward, of Foundary Methodist; assistant treasurer, Walter W. Britt, of First Congregational; secretary, Ralph Compton, of Washington City Church of the Brethren.

The Rev. Dr. John Sutherland Bonnell, pastor of Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, declared in an address that "democracy and Christian liberty are the twin forces that make a Nation impervious to Communism."

The free Protestant countries of Europe, Dr. Bonnell asserted, are "the greatest bulwark against the rising Red tide which seeks to submerge Europe."

Best defense against totalitarianism, the clergyman said, is Protestant Christianity, which has a "mighty stake in religious freedom."

"As long as religion is free in America, we shall never be ensalved politically," he asserted.

Child Care Needs Are Outlined

More than 400 mothers and a handful of fathers last night heard expert opinion on the physical life, emotional growth, intellectual development and personality needs of their children.

The occasion was the first annual spring conference of the preschool play center Mothers' Council held in cooperation with the District Recreation Department at the Y.W.C.A., 17th and K sts. nw.

To foster intellectual development, Mrs. Marion Kingsbury, director of the Remedial Education Center, told the parents:

"Give the child freedom of spirit, independence of thought, moral self-control and self-discipline; acknowledge his capabilities; accept him as a person and give him the warmth of family."

Katherine F. Lenroot, chief of the Children's Bureau of the Social Security Administration, who made the keynote speech, said participation in the play centers put mothers in a position to find out how the community could serve the needs of children.

Mrs. A. C. Shire, president of the council, presided at the conference, and Mrs. Robert Goodwin led the summary of the discussions.

Clinton Rivers Named Arlington 'Pied Piper'

Clinton Rivers, former Arlington Health Department laboratory technician, has been appointed Arlington's "Pied Piper," to rid the county dump of its rat population, County Manager A. T. Lundberg announced yesterday.

Rivers will be in charge of a rodent and mosquito control program which the country hopes to continue after the immediate dump rat problem is disposed of.

On Membership

D. C. Colladay To Direct Trade Group

Colladay

D. C. Colladay has been named chairman of the Washington Board of Trade's membership committee for 1950-51, it was announced last night.

The appointment was made by Thornton W. Owen, president of the trade board.

The full committee, meeting last night, elected the following to serve with Colladay: Joseph C. Monaghan, first vice chairman; M. C. MacKinnon, second vice chairman; William H. Press, secretary emeritus; J. Merrill Conner, secretary; William B. Mullett, assistant secretary; Robert H. Burkart, treasurer; Robert W. Fleming, assistant treasurer; Lee P. Clagett, sergeant-at-arms.

The new chairman is the son of E. F. Colladay, who was chairman of the membership committee in 1915; three times a president of the Board of Trade, and now its general counsel.

Greenbelt Tax Rate Stands

The Greenbelt City Council voted, 4 to 1, last night in a special session to retain the community's personal property tax without amendment.

The dissenting vote was registered by Councilman Francis Lastner, who favors reduction in the tax. The rate is $3.18 per $100 assessed evaluation, and the tax has been opposed by the Greenbelt Consumers Services.

The council also prepared to reduce its budget for the 1950-1951 fiscal year by $7000.

Fairfax County Schools Get Freeze Units

Deep freeze units have been installed in 15 Fairfax County schools in the past month, according to Assistant Fairfax County School Superintendent J. H. Rice.

They were bought through the equipment and farm supply firm of Humme and Robinson. School Board chairman Fred W. Robinson is a partner in the concern.

Assistant School Superintendent J. H. Rice said funds for the units, which cost about $5000 in all, were put up by individual schools from cafeteria program surpluses on Rice's recommendation.

Rice said he made the recommendation after a two-year check on a test freezer in use at the Franklin Sherman School in McLean.

Purchase of the storage units enabled the schools to accept 9500 pounds of frozen turkey offered free in April under the Agriculture Department's Surplus Commodity program, Rice said.

Rice said the 16-cubic-foot freezers cost about $337 apiece, compared with a list price of $459.

By Court Action

Dupont Bldg. Office Use Challenged

The Dupont Circle Building, once a luxurious apartment house and now a large office building, is in tenant trouble again.

District Court Judge Edward A. Tamm yesterday ruled that the building owners could not force the District government to issue them an office building permit. He also refused to enjoin the District from prosecuting the owners for running an office building without a permit.

As a result of the ruling, the building owners are faced with these alternatives:

1. Paying a fine of from $1 to $100 a day for every day they operate the building as an office building without a permit.

2. Remodeling the building to insure that the floors will take the 70-pounds-per-square-inch live load required of office buildings.

3. Evict present office tenants and reconvert the building to apartment use.

Richitt Denies Guarding Truman in Chicago

Capt. Anthony Richitt returned from Chicago yesterday where he attended functions of the Democratic Party's Jefferson Jubilee but denied reports he had guarded the President, nor, he added, was he a member of the presidential party.

"I left Washington Saturday morning in a private plane as a guest and at the invitation of a Washington businessman, and I flew back . . . on a commercial plane, "Richitt said.

Richitt declined to identify the businessman. Acting Police Superintendent Walter Storm said the Eighth Precinct captain went on annual leave Saturday and is due back at his post today.

Although he said he was invited to attend the affair at which President Truman spoke, Richitt added that he did not because "I was attending several other functions."

He did not march, he said, on the three-mile parade that escorted the President to Chicago Stadium.

"I was in front of the Blackstone Hotel at 7 p. m. when the parade started, and I was invited to join the parade but I did not," Richitt asserted.

Richitt last November traveled to Key West, Fla., on vacation at the same time President Truman vacationed at the "Little White House" there. It was stated officially that Richitt paid his way on a plane chartered by newspapermen covering the President.

Also a Florida traveler via the plane—and on the same pay-as-you-go basis—was Police Superintendent Robert J. Barrett.

Ritchitt at that time was in command of the Third Precinct, the "White House precinct." Since then Barrett and Ritchitt have had a dispute which at one time reached the attentions of a House subcommittee investigating crime.

Ritchitt subsequently was transferred to the outlying Eighth Precinct.

A secret report on the "Richitt case" is in the hands of District Commissioners. Commissioner John Russell Young said he will release the report when the Commissioners decide what action is to be taken on it.

Coins From 1702 Found In Shore Excavation

Asbury Park, N. J., May 16 (U.P.). A passerby found an old leather pouch today in an excavation for a swimming pool 300 feet from the ocean shoreline. Inside were 35 Spanish, French and English gold and silver coins, dated from 1702 to 1795.

According to local legend, this area was an early-day meeting place for pirates.

Duff Leading in Pennsylvania

the outset but picked up a big lead in returns from the first fourth of Philadelphia's districts.

Both Kunkel ond Cooke were backed by former Senator Joseph R. Grundy, long the top Republican leader in Pennsylvania. Duff said his campaign with Fine was aimed at ending "Grundyism—Government by a few for the bentfit of a few, at the expense of the public."

Grundy backers retorted Duff was "putting his personal aims above the good of the party," and aimed at "governing the State by proxy from Washington, through his handpicked candidate."

By law, the Pennsylvania Governor cannot succeed himself.

Duff said during the bitterly fought campaign that he "would rather go down to defeat with Fine in the primary" than be nominated with Cooke.

Fine, who resigned from the State Superior Court to become a candidate for Governor, is a former GOP chairman in Luzerne County in the hard coal region.

Most politicians regarded the governorship fight as the key to the Duff-Grundy struggle for party control. With the Federal Government controlled by Democrats, a Republican Senator has only limited patronage and appointive powers. A Republican Governor is in a key position in the appointment of the approximately 40,000 State employes, and has close-to-home contact with the party organization on every level.

Before the voting started, the Cooke-Fine contest was regarded as a tossup.

But Duff was conceded an edge in the battle for the senatorial nomination.

There were 2,862,112 Republicans registered for the primary; 1,926,216 Democrats.

The Democratic senatorial candidate is United States Senator Francis J. Myers, unopposed for renomination. The party slated as his running mate for Governor, Richardson Dilworth, Philadelphia city treasurer. Dilworth had only token opposition.

Results of the Republican primary were being closely watched for their possible influence on 1952 presidential maneuvering. Duff and Grundy were key figures at the 1948 GOP national convention with Grundy backing Thomas E. Dewey and Duff Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg of Michigan and later Senator Robert A. Taft of Ohio.

Boys' Club Leaders Confer

Boys Clubs of America leaders from 37 States split into workshop groups yesterday to study how to "take a boy who's only breaking windows and stop him from breaking the Ten commandments."

Upwards of a thousand executive directors, voluntary workers and board of-directors members are attending the forty-fourth annual conclave at the Shoreham Hotel.

Gen. George C. Marshall will address a luncheon meeting of the group today. Former President Herbert C. Hoover will speak Thursday night at the convention dinner, at which FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover will be awarded the "Golden Keystone" for outstanding service to the movement.

The tone of yesterday's workshops was expressed in the statement of Howard G. Gibbs, assistant director of program and personnel services of the BCA:

"The idea of fun does not exclude fun with a purpose."

'Accidental' War Always Possible

Senator Millard E. Tydings (D., Md.) said last night that military men have told him there is little danger of a "deliberate" war this year or next but that there is always danger of an "accidental" war.

The Senator spoke at a National Defense Week rally sponsored by the Bethesda-Chevy Chase and Silver Spring Chapters of the Reserve Officers Association. The meeting was in the Leland Junior High School.

Tydings said that sooner or later we must teach civilians orderly retreat from cities liable to be bombed. Fire departments, too, should be decentralized to remain intact for fire duty, he said.

On the optimistic side, the speaker saw "our large bombing fleet" as a deterrent to any aggressor.

Democrats Cheered By Rally in Chicago

Chicago, May 16 (AP).—The Democratic campaign boss today said the Democrats and President Truman are more popular than ever, and the party is counting on more presidential trips to help win 1950 elections.

William M. Boyle, jr., Democratic National Chairman, said he is hoping and planning for more "whistle-stop" tours, aimed at critical States.

"President Truman's leadership and popularity is greater than ever before, and the same is true of the Democratic Party," Boyle told newsmen.

"His trip last week through the West showed there is more Democratic support than in 1948.

"The President's popularity is much bigger."

Boyle said he doesn't think the Democrats are falling into the pit of overconfidence that party leaders, at a national conference over the weekend, said the Republicans plunged into two years ago.

"We must guard against it," he said, "but I don't think we're overly optimistic."

Enthusiastic Over Conference

Boyle was enthusiastic over a Democratic national conference that preceded Mr. Truman's Chicago Stadium speech last night. About 400,000 persons watched the presidential parade and 22,000 filled the stadium for a Jefferson jubilee celebration.

He said Mr. Truman probably will visit Chicago "more than once" before November 7, and he may visit some cities in down-State Illinois, a GOP stronghold, to help reelect Senator Scott W. Lucas, his Senate floor leader, over Republican Everett M. Dirksen.

Boyle said he doesn't think any Democratic voters are being wooed away by the GOP as a result of Senator Joseph R. McCarthy's charges that there are Communists in the Government.

The national committee, in an unusual resolution, early today went on record against employment of Communists, but condemned "smears and innuendoes which hamper our Government . . ."

Boyle said that if he had had his way, the committee would not have "dignified" McCarthy's charges.

Incensed, Not Worried'

Democratic workers are "incensed, but not worried" about the Wisconsin Republican's Red accusations, Boyle said.

The committee renewed its backing of Mr. Truman's Fair Deal program and the "sound, liberal platform" adopted by the 1948 Democratic National Convention.

It said the party's fundamental goals are:

"To exert the leadership of our ideas and our ideals so that the sinews of our free enterprise economy will continue to work for a lasting and just peace based upon the freedom of the individual to enjoy the rights and liberties of which he is deprived under communism or other forms of totalitarianism.

"To maintain our defenses so that no foe of the American way of life—a democracy of free citizens and a free enterprise economy—shall dare to seek to conquer us by military force.

"To make our democratic Government and our free-enterprise economy dynamic so that we shall continue to improve the lot of all of our citizens and to increase our national production to provide jobs for an expanding population, and by creating a constantly expanding economy to avoid the old cycle of boom and bust."

The committee said it is "proud of an Administration under which national income has more than tripled in 17 years."

It appeared probable that Mr. Truman might go into Ohio to help Democrat Joseph Ferguson's attempt to unseat Republican Senator Taft. Boyle said he and Ferguson conferred today about what the national committee could do. Ferguson will visit Washington Tuesday to talk to other party leaders about his campaign.

VA Employe Wins Award

A Veterans Administration supervisor with a wooden left leg yesterday was awarded $20,000 damages as a result of injuries to her right foot suffered in a July, 1947, W. M. & A. bus accident.

A District Court jury awarded Mrs. Edith Maske, 42, 6060 Brooks rd. se., the damages from the motor lines.

Mrs. Maske lost her left leg by amputation in 1945 as a result of a gas range explosion in Parkersburg, W. Va., some years before.

She testified that she was sitting in the bus when a sudden stop at 5th and E sts. nw., threw the high Cuban heel of a standing female passenger onto her right instep.

Prior to the accident she was able to walk without assistance, Mrs. Maske said, but since the accident she has been forced to use crutches.

Mrs. Maske was represented by David G. Bress, Maurice A. Guervitz and Alvin L. Newmyer, jr.

'Flying Saucers' Real, Rickenbacker Feels

Savannah, Ga. May 16 (U.P.)—Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker apparently does not agree with Air Force leaders that flying saucers are nonexistent.

"There must be something to them, for too many reliable persons have made reports on them," Rickenbacker said here.

"I am duty-bound not to say what I know about them—or what I don't know about them.

"However, if they do exist, you can rest assured that they are ours."

Police Groups Probe Arlington Kidnap-Holdup of Soldier

Three police jurisdictions yesterday were investigating the Monday night kidnaping and knifepoint robbery of Air Force Corpl. Roland W. Pennypacker.

Arlington police, the FBI and the Army's Criminal Investigation Division were working on the case, reported to Arlington police near midnight Monday. District police said they may enter the case when an official report is received from county police.

Pennypacker, 23, who lives at Alabama Hall, Arlington Farms, said he was walking down 10th st. nw. about 11 p. m. when a 1937 Plymouth, drove up and its three teenage occupants waved at him.

He told police he went over to the car, thinking they wanted directions. Two of the youths grabbed him and threw him into the back seat, holding an open knife against him, he said.

The car was driven to Arlington. At 14th and Troy sts., within 2 blocks of police headquarters, Pennypacker told police, the car halted and the youths took $3.50 from his wallet, plus his watch and a belt buckle.

He then fought his way out of the car suffering a scratched face and black eye, and the youths, about 19, drove away. They missed about $30 folded in his watch pocket, he said.

Truman Back; Lauds Tydings

train informally chatting with reporters. One group greeted him with "Here's Harry," the new Democratic campaign song that wowed Monday night's rally in the Chicago stadium. "Oh, you guys!" the President laughed.

The President was plainly well pleased with the trip and the precedent he had set by "reporting" directly to the people of the West and Northwest. He told the Cumberland crowd it had been "a most successful tour."

As at Chicago Monday night, he removed the "nonpolitical" wraps to jibe at Republicans by name and to renew his invitation to "forward-looking people who have the welfare of the United States at heart to come in and join the Democratic Party."

Gov. William Preston Lane, jr., of Maryland went to Cumberland to welcome him back and the crowd there was one of the most enthusiastic of the trip. Mrs. Ada Conley Long, representing the United Women's groups of Cumberland, made a speech presenting Mrs. Truman with an orchid corsage, and then almost left the train with the orchids. She clambered back to present them again.

A delegation from Local 1874 of the Textile Workers Union of America flaunted signs reading "We're With Harry—Not Taft-Hartley," and "6-Hour Day With Truman," and "And We Know Unemployment."

The President took the unemployment cue as the theme of his rear-platform chat. The Celanese Corporation of America, which employed many workers here during the war has had to cut operations, and mine employment is reduced. A March survey of Cumberland employment showed 7500 employed in the county out of a labor force of 37,500.

"I am very much aware of the fact that here in Cumberland you are not sharing the prosperity that exists in most parts of the country," he said. "It is a tragic thing that thousands of people should be out of work, through no fault of their own, and with very little chance of finding a job soon.

"There are several cities—like Cumberland—which are suffering from unemployment, even though the country as a whole is very prosperous.

"The Federal Government is going to keep on doing everything it can to remedy local situations like this one in Cumberland, and to prevent such situations from arising again in the future."

As in other towns and cities across the country he listed local Federal projects that should lead to growth and new business, such as the Savage River dam to be finished next year. He said the resulting increased water supply should enable "one of the companies here" to expand and hire more people.

Mr. Truman said a public housing project to be built in Cumberland will provide some more jobs, and the Cumberland-Ridgely flood control project will be of long-term benefit and ultimately bring more industries to Cumberland.

He said the Government is trying to relieve the problem by turning over surplus foods for use of needy families, and helping to feed children through the school lunch program.

Monumental Jefferson Work Is Launched

examine the multiple proofs of his pioneer theoretical work in the cause of freedom in the years preceding and the months following the composition of the Declaration of Independence.

More Complete Picture

We see the young Jefferson more fully than ever before, not only because of the more complete presentation of his own writings, but also because he is now permitted to exist side by side with his contemporaries. For the letters to Jefferson reveal how his friends saw him and provide essential background for his own outgoing correspondence. The edition as a whole will contain roughly 85 percent more Jefferson material than any previous edition of his work.

The first letter of this opening volume draws the reader at once into the center of Jefferson's youthful plans for his own life. Here is an earnest lad of 16 arguing his reasons for deciding to go to college, pointing out to one of his guardians that by doing so he will save the one fourth of his time "inevitably" lost at Shadwell by the presence of company. By foregoing the company, he will gain that much more time for school and "lessen the Expences of the Estate in House-Keeping."

But this mood gives way in a very few years to another Jefferson: the effusive and almost faddishly literary youth, a veritable Polonius in his gratuitous use of moral maxims, a romantic who sighs alternately for his beloved "Belinda" and to "visit particularly England, Holland, France, Spain, Italy (where I would buy me a good fiddle) and Egypt and return through the British provinces to the northward home." This is the same Jefferson, by the way, who is a totally disillusioned cynic of the sophomoric variety, deploring "this bit of a world, this clod of dirt, which I insist is the vilest of the whole system. . . I verily believe Page that I shall die soon, and yet I can give no other reason for it but that I am tired with living." Jefferson was 20 at this time.

Seen in New Light

Charming and unforgettable though most of the personal sidelights on Jefferson will prove to be, they are distinctly overshadowed by the record of his political development. Thanks to the astonishing breadth and exacting scholarship of the editors, hardly a state paper or important document fails to take on fresh meaning. New light is thrown on Jefferson as the liberal champion of Western settlers against the powerful land speculators, of religious toleration against the established church in Virginia, and of legislative reform against aristocratic feudal privileges.

Considerable reflection and time for intensive study of the new documentary and editorial material presented in this volume are necessary in order to decide on the most important contents. My first judgment would be that the treatment of four documents or groups of documents is outstanding.

The first really major achievement is the handling of a series of papers beginning in May 1774 and continuing through August of that year. This group not only gives the so-called (not by Jefferson) A Summary View of the Rights of British America in the best form it has ever been presented, but places it meaningfully in its entire Virginia context. From an odd document like the "Resolution of the House of Burgesses Designating a Day of Fasting and Prayer" as a supposedly orderly protest of the Virginia House of Burgesses against "the hostile Invasion of the City of Boston, in our Sister Colony of Massachusetts Bay" we sense the cumulative growth of Jefferson's doctrine of natural rights, until it culminates in the high-pitched emotional statement of the Summary View. The latter is an early expression of the system of ideas that finds more mature expression in The Declaration of Independence.

The second splendid editorial feat is the solution of the vexed question of the respective roles played by the generally more conservative John Dickinson and the generally more radical Thomas Jefferson in composing the popular revolutionary document, the Declaration of the Causes and Necessity for Taking Up Arms (1775).

Claimed Authorship

Dickinson claimed that he was the author. Jefferson first wrote that Dickinson simply "retouched" his own draft, but many years later, when his memory was not entirely reliable, wrote that he had prepared a draft whose sentiments were too strong for Dickinson, and that Dickinson accordingly took the paper and put it into entirely new form. Both men were mistaken. By a careful inquiry into all the relevant documentary evidence, the editors establish that an "unwilling collaboration" between the two men took place, that they here disagreed not on issues of radicalism vs. conservatism, but on matters of style and details, such as whether the Crown or Parliament should be credited with authority to participate in the granting of colonial charters. Both men agreed on the fundamental aim of declaring merely that the colonies intended to resist violence; neither of them was yet disposed to advocate the "desperate measure" of establishing independence.

ADRIENNE KOCH, associate professor of philosophy, Division of General Education, New York University, and the author of "Jefferson and Madison, The Great Collaboration" published two months ago by Alfred A. Knopf, is in private life, Mrs. Lawrence Kegan of 2120 16th st. nw. Dr. Koch is also coauthor (with William Peden) of "The Life and Selected Writings of Thomas Jefferson" and "The Selected Writings of John Quincy Adams"; and the author of "The Philosophy of Thomas Jefferson," which was awarded Columbia University's Woodbridge Prize in Philosophy

A third sequence of unusual moment concerns The Virginia Constitution in 1776. Here the editors are able to establish definitively that George Mason, hitherto considered the sole author, was only one of several who contributed materially to the Constitution—John Adams playing an important, if indirect, part and one of Jefferson's comprehensive drafts of a constitution for Virginia supplying at least four distinct passages in the Constitution, with very little alteration. Thus, the mistaken view that Jefferson provided only the long preamble to the Constitution must now be amended to the position that he contributed far more than has generally been supposed.

Dramatic High Point

The fourth sequence concerns the most dramatic document in this Nation's history, The Declaration of Independence. The editors present a more perfect series of composition drafts than could have been provided by any previous study, since the fragment of the earliest draft of the Declaration, in Jefferson's hand, included here and reproduced in facsimile, was discovered by the editor, Julian Boyd, in 1947—two years too late for his excellent monograph on the Declaration, which surpassed all earlier studies of this subject. It is entirely warranted to recommend the account of the evolution of the text of the Declaration given in this first volume as the most perfect ever to be presented.

Thus, the first volume of The Papers of Thomas Jefferson makes its own significant contribution to American history by printing the most important official documents of the Revolutionary era in superbly exact texts, from earliest draft to final form. We are impressed by the cumulative benefits of a scientifically oriented method, which studies individual documents to establish the definitive text and determine relationships hitherto unnoticed or misunderstood, thereby yielding genuinely new historical discoveries. The invaluable editorial comments cue the reader to the significant relationships and themselves constitute masterful, if informal, historical analyses.

It is tempting to dwell for a moment on the contrast between this venture devoted to an American founding father and publications in the Soviet Union devoted to the works of the major architects of communism. Each later edition of the writings of Marx, Lenin, or Stalin is seized upon to rewrite history in accord with the current official ideology. In free societies, conscientious scholars strive to approximate ever more closely to the truth; in totalitarian scieties, zealous or obedient historians mold their materials into whatever they understand to be required to glorify their leaders or condone the latest turn in policy. It is entirely fitting, therefore, that The Papers of Thomas Jefferson should be a testament to the close connection between democracy and truth since it was Jefferson who saw that relationship and gave it classic American expression.

At long last, Thomas Jefferson is being represented to the American people, and to that part of the world that is interested in the meaning of American democracy, in an admirably complete and beautiful form. The volumes are handsome and excellently printed, in a special type called "Monticello," designed to approximate an early American type that Jefferson admired. They are enlivened by fine black and white plates, many of them facsimiles of documents, and Jefferson's own drawings, and are bound in an effective blue, Jefferson's favorite color. Art, science, scholarly integrity, and an abounding faith in the liberal champion of the American cause of liberty have all conspired to issue in this triumph for Thomas Jefferson and the Jeffersonian spirit in America.

Mrs. Willkie Proposed Against Marcantonio

New York, May 16 (AP).—The New York County Republican chairman today proposed Mrs. Wendell Willkie as coalition candidate to oppose Representative Vito Marcantonio (ALP, N.Y) in the November election.

The recommendation came from Thomas J. Curran, who described the widow of the one-time presidential candidate as "a great citizen."

In a statement, he called upon Democratic leaders to join in support of Mrs. Willkie in the Eighteenth District election.

Druggists Pledge $18,000 to UJA

Forty members of the druggists' division of the United Jewish Appeal of Greater Washington last night pledged $18,000 towards the drive's 1950 Washington goal of $2,500,000.

The division's pledges brings the campaign total in pledges and contributions to $1,375,000. Principal speaker at the meeting, at the Statler Hotel, was Author Stefan Heim.

On the Town

By Georganne Williamson

FRAN GREGORY, energetic Californian with red hair and a way of actng out her songs, has taken over the entertaining chores in the Sazarac Room of the Old New Orleans. Les Williams plays the piano as usual and Roberta roams the two floors oracling the future.

Singing with Bob Simpson's band, Fran chooses selections that lend themselves well to her dramatic ability. She uses material seldom heard from singers hereabouts, such as "Down In the Depths on the Ninetieth Floor." Altho a New Yorker of only six months' standing, she colorfully puts across the big city life. "Little Girl from Little Rock," from "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," and "One for the Road" are given the last flourish by this graduate of the famed Pasadena Playhouse.

Roberta, the teller-of-the-future, is a svelte, dark-haired woman who used to be a showgirl herself. After studying drama and music in New York, she joined the Schubert company and toured in "Blossom Time," "Student Prnce" and "Irene."

Roberts turned her strange childhood clairvoyance into a career after an unnerving incident. One night she decided to entertain a date by reading his fortune. The man was a furrier, and Roberta found herself telling details of how he was smuggling furs into thi country from Canada. She was so right.

The frightened furrier far from praising her gifts of second sight, thought only of fleeing. Again and again he begged her to tell him who had told her these details. Her answer was always the same. Since the age of 6, she had been kept awake nights by voices and pictures she couldn't understand. Information just came to her, she said.

Lewis Denies Order to Continue Strike

By The Associated Press

John L. Lewis rejected an invitation to testify voluntarily last night before a House Labor subcommittee, but denied that he sent any secret stay-out orders to his United Mine Workers during the coal strike last winter.

The subcommittee, headed by Representative Jacobs (D., Ind.), nevertheless heard the complaints of two coal miners suspended from union membership after differences with UMW officials.

Joseph L. Dickmos of Library, Pa., said he was suspended from the union for six months after referring to Lewis as "a dictator." He added that he still feels that way.

Lloyd H. Sidener, former president of Local 7455 at Canton, Ill., said he was suspended and fined $50,000 after trying to go back to work after the issuance of a Federal injunction last February ordering striking miners back to their jobs.

Both men said they believe there should be more autonomy in local unions, with the members having more to say about how the unions are conducted.

Sidener earlier charged that although Lewis publicly called on the miners to obey the Federal Court's back-to-work order, the word was passed among the strikers that "Lewis said the whistle blew one." Sidener said that in miners' talk that meant there wouldn't be any coal dug.

Nothing to it, Lewis said in a letter to Jacobs, which the Congressman made public.

"Mr. Sidener is in error in his press-quoted assertions that he received, directly or indirectly, any 'whistle stop' instructions from this office," Lewis' letter said.

"No such instructions were uttered or authorized at any time by this office to Mr. Sidener or any other of the hundreds of thousands of officers and members of the United Mine Workers of America.

Jacobs was not able to summon Lewis to attend the hearing on other than a voluntary basis, because Representative Lesinski (D., Mich.), chairman of the full labor committee, opposes the investigation and has withdrawn Jacob's subpena powers.

Sidener said he tried to obey the stop-strike order and lead a group of Canton miners back to work. When the walkout finally was ended, the Canton local of the union levied a fine of $50,000 on him and informed him he could pay it at the rate of $25 a day, which was more than his daily pay. When he did not pay the fine, he was held to be in arrears with the union and accordingly lost his job.

6-Day Railroad Strike Ends

as they announced the agreement in Chicago.

Here are the highlights of the settlement:

The union gives up its 11-year fight to get a second fireman assigned to multiengine diesel locomotives. Acceptance of this demand would have cost the industry 40 million dollars a year, according to the carriers. Two fact-finding boards had turned down the union's demand.

The railroads agree to arbitration of the union's claim that the "supervisory" checkers of diesel engines on high-speed passenger trains are doing work allotted to firemen under the provisions of a 1943 contract.

The union considers the railroads' acceptance of arbitration on this point a major victory, for if the brotherhood should win the arbitration award, the carriers would be forced to install a second fireman on some 5000 passenger trains, according to the union.

Rail management insists there are many fewer than 5000 "supervisory" checks aboard the diesels. The roads also maintain that even if the arbitration award goes against them, the companies might be able to eliminate the checkers altogether.

To Punish Violators

On this score, the roads agree to punish any fireman who violates the watch-rule, which forbids the fireman from leaving the cab of the locomotive while a high-speed passenger train is in motion. The union charged that the railroads have been winking at violations of this rule. Enforcement of this regulation, along with the arbitration award, the brotherhood feels, will necessitate hiring of additional firemen on the multidiesel trains.

The agreement keeps all firemen now assigned to yard diesels—"teapots"—on their jobs, calls for assignment of a firemen on all new "teapots," and for arbitration of the union's request that a fireman be placed aboard the yard diesels now operated solely by locomotive engineers.

The railroads agree to eliminate wage differentials among certain classes of locomotives; to protect the union of those railroads now giving the brotherhood greater benefits than provided under the new agreement; and to permit all rail employes who stayed away from work, strikers and sympathizers alike, to return without prejudice.

Union officials were particularly happy about nipping in the bud an up-coming problem of technological unemployment on the ultra-modern type of diesels, known as Budd Cars. The Budd car combines in a single unit the diesel motor and the passenger or freight car.

There are now fewer than a dozen Budd cars in operation. These are run by an engineer without benefit of fireman. The peace agreement calls for the addition of a fireman when two or more Budd cars are hitched together to make a train.

Back On The Rails

Despite the face-saving language in which the rail settlement is couched, the locomotive firemen lost the major issue in their six-day strike. It was apparent from the first that their demand for a second fireman on multiple-unit diesel locomotives was bound to fail, for the weight of public opinion, solidly buttressed by the reports of two presidential fact-finding boards, was against them. The agreement to arbitrate disputes under the present contract, plus the ironing out of pay differentials on various types of locomotives, were concessions enabling the union to get off the hook.

Fortunately, the settlement came before great national harm was done, although the constriction of service on five major railroads caused considerable inconvenience. Because the agreement forestalled an actual emergency, the demands for revision of the Railway Labor Act probably will die down. That act can work only if the parties display a willingness to abide by the facts which has not lately existed. Certainly the settlement ought to put an end to new featherbedding demands among rail unions generally, for the surest way to revive pressure for compulsory arbitration would be to try to saddle the railroads with more made work.

Beyond this, however, there is a lesson in the strike for railroad management. Obviously when large numbers of men are willing to disrupt a vital industry, they are strongly motivated. The motivation in this case is a sort of inchoate fear of the effects of technological advance as seen in dieselization. If rail management and the rail unions jointly can tackle the problem of job security vis-a-vis the savings and potential of greater traffic made possible by the diesel, they may help avoid future headaches for themselves and for the public.

The Jefferson Papers

The first fruits of a great historical project will be in evidence at the Library of Congress today. At an appropriate ceremony in the Coolidge Auditorium Dr. Harold W. Dodds, president of Princeton University, will present President Truman and General Marshall special copies of the first volume of what is to be a series of 52 books containing the full and complete papers of Thomas Jefferson. All Jefferson's writings on such varied subjects as political philosophy, law, religion, architecture, farming, wine and cookery will be included. Probably more interesting will be 18,000 letters written by Jefferson and 25,000 letters written to him which are to be reproduced in full or in part. The Library of Congress is not exaggerating when it says that this vast conglomeration of documents will illuminate the whole course of American history from the 1760's to the 1820's as does no comparable body of private letters.

The scope of the undertaking is indicated by the fact that none of the three previous editions of Jefferson's works has included more than 15 percent of the total number of documents now going into The Papers of Thomas Jefferson. The new tomes, each to contain 700 pages or more, with illustrations, will be published at the rate of about four a year until the series is completed in 1963. Scholars and collectors all over the world have contributed to this vast collection, but most of the 50,000 documents now assembled at Princeton University have come from the great collections of Jeffersoniana in the Library of Congress, the National Archives, the Massachusetts Historical Society and similar sources. A vast number of documents have been reproduced by means of the continuous-process photo-enlarger (the V-mail machine), and when the undertaking has been completed all these files will be presented to the Library of Congress. In addition to the published volumes, scholars will thus have access in one spot to a rich collection of documents and supporting papers.

It is especially fitting that the writings of Jefferson should be at once preserved and made available in such comprehensive fashion. For Jefferson is universally recognized as one of the great minds of America, and, in spite of all that has been written about him, he is still enigmatic. To some extent we know his mind, but not his heart. Because of his aloofness, Jefferson will never become the familiar figure that Lincoln is. But his 18,000 letters, many of which still are unknown to scholars, ought to throw a great deal of new light on his personal life as well as his thinking. We do not suppose that the result will be either to still the controversies or clear up the mysteries about Jefferson; for he was a complex character and changing circumstances seemed to involve him in many self-contradictions. The assembled Jefferson papers will serve their purpose if they bring this fabulous American a little closer to the people who cherish the liberties he helped to establish. In our day, as in his, "tyranny over the mind of man" has become the world's foremost problem, and the generality of men as well as scholars are turning more and more to Jefferson for inspiration.

Who's Winning?

John Foster Dulles says we are losing the cold war, Paul Hoffman that we are winning it. Who is right? We suspect that the two authorities are estimating the situation according to different criteria. Mr. Hoffman can point to the same list of achievements that Mr. Truman had in mind the other day in voicing his own optimism. And they are impressive. Production in western Europe has been restored, inflation licked, anti-communist strength built up, the nations of the Atlantic have been banded together, Soviet entry to the eastern Mediterranean is blocked, and America is fully employed—these are mighty items on the plus side of the cold war ledger. Offsetting them is the crumbling situation in that vast and teeming area from Iran east to the Philippines.

Doubtless Mr. Dulles would acknowledge this toting up of the world account. What in all probability he is thinking of is the moral side of the budget, and this, as Napoleon observed, is all important in making war, cold or otherwise. We are apt to forget it. Cartier's Les Secretes de la Guerre reminds us that "less than 200,000 Germans defeated Franco-British forces of two million men in August, 1940," but those 200,000 Germans had a superb morale. That lesson ought to have been in mind in appraising the chances in the Arab-Jew conflict in Palestine, and it must be part of the calculations for the arming of western Europe. The first need of the free world is the strengthening of its moral fiber. An idea is worth a hundred divisions if it is a "demanding" idea requiring a contribution from every individual and if it is winged with hope.

With such an idea people acquire a cause and with a cause the initiative is never lost. As it is, the Soviet has the initiative—that is to say, it is dominating events. This is the reward of facing the future and planning ahead to predetermined goals. By contrast the United States is full of confusion and frustration, preoccupied with things past. Such an attitude carries the same danger as Lot's wife invited when she looked back and became a pillar of salt. It is producing an overwrought condition which is making our Allies wonder whether there is the moral leadership in our country capable of leading the Allied forces to victory.

Mr. Dulles has some good suggestions: a real nonpartisanship in foreign policy-making, a national board of strategy, and a top command in military and economic policy for the Allies. As an example of the initiative, he instances the Schuman plan, which, he says, "brilliantly illustrates how boldness can turn dangerous division into reassuring strength." It is an idea upon the above specifications, worth more than a hundred divisions to France, to Germany, and, indeed, to Europe. It is a standard around which the European can rally to realize and to defend. For aimless talk the French have substituted action. Here is the kind of opportunity that, in the Greek image, is like a runner with a forelock that can be grasped, but no backlock to hang onto when he has passed. The West will start to win when America gets behind an idea like Schuman's and vivifies it.

FEPC Dilemma

Jonathan Daniels' outspoken speech at a Chicago forum featuring the President's Cabinet brings into sharp focus the dilemma facing the Administration in connection with the FEPC bill. At no time has the Administration had the votes to pass the bill in the face of the bitter opposition from the Southern wing of the Democratic Party. It has used FEPC as a handy political issue, without any real prospect of turning promises into legislation. President Truman has pretended that it was a question of pushing the measure through over the opposition of a few reactionary Dixiecrats. But Mr. Daniels' opposition is plain notice that the liberal elements in Mr. Truman's own Southern following are fighting him on the issue of making the FEPC compulsory.

Mr. Daniels, as he pointed out in his speech, was one of the few Southerners to vote for Mr. Truman's nomination at Philadelphia in 1948 and to take an active part in his campaign. Like other progressive leaders in the South, however, he fears that the FEPC fight will strengthen the cause of the Dixiecrats and enable them "to hide behind the civil rights issue while they fight every progressive measure." In other words, the Administration is pressing the fight for civil rights at the point where the greatest opposition is encountered. Instead of moving step by step toward attainment of its laudable goal of eliminating discrimination, the Administration has got itself entangled in a mere vote-making maneuver.

The Senate will vote Friday on the limitation of debate on the motion to take up the Administration's FEPC bill, and Senator Taft has announced that he will support cloture. Even if the preliminary filibuster is thus broken, however, it will break out again so long as the Administration's compulsory bill is before the Senate. The Republicans, who are also playing political football with the issue, are not likely to agree to a limitation of debate for the sake of getting the Democratic bill passed. They have their own measure to push and will undoubtedly try to substitute it for the Administration bill if cloture switches the debate to the merits of the legislation itself.

The House has already accepted the counterpart of Senator Taft's voluntary FEPC. Apparently the Administration will have to accept this measure or withdraw from the fight to avoid wrecking the remainder of its program. The choice thus open to the President is not a happy one, but he should have realized that he cannot make campaign promises which his own party has no prospect of fulfilling without placing himself at the mercy of the Republicans.

We have felt that, because of the gravity of the international situation and the demoralizing effect of a filibuster, the Senate should promptly accept the House bill setting up a voluntary FEPC. Mr. Daniels' thinking seems to be running along the same line. The President could salvage some credit for himself and his party by asking his Senate leaders to eliminate the compulsory provisions of the bill. The alternative promises to be another fiasco that would give a hollow sound to fresh promises from the stump.

Turkish Confidence

Nearly four years ago the Turks for the first time were given a party choice in voting for members of the Turkish Parliament. The new party was called the Democrat Party, founded by Jelal Bayar, a banker, for many years Minister of National Economy and then Premier during the year before Kemal Ataturk's death in 1938. Bayar's group opposed the official party, the People's Party, founded by Kemal Ataturk and headed by Ismet Inonu, who, starting as the late Ataturk's chief of staff, succeeded him as President. The Democrat Party got 34 seats, compared with 403 for the People's Party, and even this modest showing was hailed as a demonstration of political progress in Turkey. Now, in this week's elections, the Democrat Party has replaced the People's Party. The event is of more than passing interest, for Turkey is closely bound to America through the ECA and the special military program, and the upset is clear evidence of a strengthening of political liberty in an ancient country newly wedded to it.

Since the war the Turks have been subjected to a never-flagging war of nerves on the part of Soviet Russia. Yet they have shown not the slightest softening under the guns. Like Russia's Baltic neighbors, the Finns, they are without fear, and one of the ministers is said to have suggested recently that if Americans ever get frightened about investing in America, there is always room and safety in Turkey. In truth, the fighting heart of Turkey is without a superior among the nations in Russia's path, and is equal to Finland's. That is the reason why Turkey has not had overt attention from the Russian soldiery and why Finland's independence is respected. The Turks have put to good use the military aid they have received from America, and it may be that this, together with ECA assistance, is responsible for the confidence with which they have enlarged the area of political liberty. In any case, it is a satisfaction that in Turkey as well as in Greece the Truman Doctrine has paid off. Turkey is a great stabilizing force in the Near as well as the Middle East, and there may now be warrant for hoping that she will move closer to Israel and Greece in her foreign relations.

Accumulated Leave

Jerry Kluttz reports that an executive order will soon be issued requiring Federal employes to take at least 15 of their 26 days of annual leave in the year in which it is earned. In future no employe will be allowed to carry over more than 60 days of accumulated leave except in unusual cases, while employes who have acquired vacation credits in excess of 60 days must use them "within a reasonable time."

During the war years vacations had to be curtailed, justifying the liberalization of accumulated leave requirements. But there is no excuse for continuing such practices in time of peace. Indeed, it is open to question whether the new directive is not overliberal in allowing 11 days of unused leave each year to be carried over. However, under this arrangement, it is said, the average employe would probably end the year with little or no accumulated leave credits, since many Federal workers are compelled to take time off to look after their personal affairs.

This is as it should be. For vacations are not designed solely for the purpose of enjoyment. They are also a means of improving the efficiency of employes by releasing them for a time from the monotony of the daily work routine and enabling them to return to their duties rested and spiritually refreshed. Short annual vacations are a much more effective preventive of the staleness and apathy that result from a regime of all work and no play than prolonged vacations taken at intervals of several years.

Moreover, the physical well-being and the mental alertness of employes are often impaired, if annual vacations are skipped or skimped. Finally lengthy vacations, especially if taken by men and women holding responsible positions in Government agencies and departments, may cause great inconvenience and hardship to coworkers and subordinates, lowering the quality of the service performance.

THE LOST RETURNING

Perhaps the day will come when I can walk
With calm, unhutried steps along this street
Thinking of nothing, pausing then to talk
With someone's children anyone might meet.
That day I plan to walk quite slowly by
The bridge and marsh, and past the willow tree
Seeing as strangers all the paths that cry
Look down this way—down here—remember me?

I shall see other houses then, not one;
There will be lilacs at some other door;
Nothing will change except an exile done,
The lost returning, lonelier than before,
Listening again for voices long unheard,
Knowing this silence for their final word.

Dirty Washington

It is gratifying to note that folks are beginning to notice the unkempt and filthy condition of our Capital City. Seems strange that so much money can be wasted on far-away things, while neglect of all kinds goes on in our own country. Washington is the dirtiest and most neglected city I've seen in many a year of travel.

D. E. DAVIS.

Occoquan, Va.

The other day I walked from my hotel to the Washington Monument, then to the Lincoln Memorial, and from there by way of the Mall to the Capitol. I was alone and I was glad I was alone. I would have been ashamed to have a visitor from another land with me, seeing what I saw of slovenly grounds keeping.

Certainly if there is one place in the country where lawns ought to be neatly cut, it is along the reflecting pool before the Lincoln Memorial. Surely the Capitol lawns should not be a veritable goat pasture. One would think the Department of Agriculture could provide a remedy for the weed-infested Capitol lawns. One of the approaches to the Washington Monument is a muddy path. Perhaps it's a bridle path. I don't believe so. Everywhere I saw grass growing between flagstones, beer bottles—moss covered, and hence not new in pools.

A side-road farmer would in many cases keep his front yard better than the United States keeps its front yard.

Aid From Spain

In his May 12 letter, on "Recognition of Spain," Mr. G. L. Rees confuses the issues at stake. Recognition of the present Spanish regime is in no wise under discussion.

Franklin may have been bitter that Spain, with a vast American Empire at its back, treaded water in recognizing the independence of the United States. Spain feared that such a measure would boomerang against her. Eventually it did. Yet Franklin was ever grateful for the help Spain afforded the nascent United States in their struggle against Great Britain. On June 23, 1777, Dr. Franklin in person visited Count Aranda to express his deep thankfulness.

Spain's aid to the United States in the War of Independence (recorded in Kimball's two volumes on Jefferson) was not limited solely to war supplies, guns, and harassing expeditions. It was so generous that in 1779 Spain joined France in war against Great Britain. Likewise the financial aid afforded to the United States by Spain must not be forgotten, for most liberally did the succoring gold under the "Aranda Plan" flow westward—a current that unfortunately has not been reversed in its modern counterpart.

If "Spain has always been the historical enemy of the United States," why is it that John Jay, the first American envoy to Madrid, wrote to Count Floridablanca on March 6, 1780, with reference to France and Spain the following: "These generous nations, who nobly strengthened their (the United States) opposition to a torrent of oppression and kindly aided in freeing them from the bondage of a nation whose arrogance and injustice had become destructive to the rights of mankind and dangerous to the peace and tranquillity of Christendom"?

He Likes The Post

Every time I pick up my copy of The Washington Post I promise myself that as soon as I lay it down I shall dash off a letter to the editor, telling him how thankful I am for the U. S. mails that bring me The Post.

Around here we live a pretty low-tension life, with international, and even national, news and politics prohibited in open discussion. When one speaks of the Atlantic Pact here, he receives either dumb looks or a response of irritation at a person trying to put on "airs."

Herblock is my daily tonic, the editorial page which brings my blood back up to its healthy boil (in sympathy, that is), and your well-balanced, both in content and in make-up, front page my ideal for the newspaperman. I work on a daily paper here.

But since my introduction to The Post in September of last year, I have grown to love and admire it, and hold it in one side of my mind as a light that will never be blown out by McCarthys or Wherrys or Hitlers.

For The People

Over the radio the other evening, I heard a Democratic Senator refer to Government "of the people, by the people, and working for the people!" It was quite a shock since from my childhood, I remember that quotation as "of the people, by the people and for the people"—or is that just an old Republican saying?

"Bias In Colleges"

As a student at George Washington University I was embittered by the remark in an editorial, "Bias in Colleges," of May 12, that stated "Every major institution of higher learning in Washington was represented—with the single, conspicuous exception of the George Washington University."

I am not going to make excuses for our absence at this conference, but I will take to task the intimation that G. W. is doing little or nothing about racial discrimination in Washington universities.

G. W. has led the way in trying to rectify this present situation. Through the tireless efforts of students, the question is now before the board of trustees, which should result in immediate action. It was also because of G. W. interest that the other local schools first began to sit up and take notice of racial policies in their own schools.

When the question of discrimination has finally been settled, I will feel proud in knowing that George Washington University played a major role in erasing the bonds of this bias.

Washington Buildings

Your May 12 issue had an interesting article on this city, its planning and its buildings. The statement that "the Nation's Capital City fails as a symbol of a great democratic culture" is true and this is largely due to the fact that city planning is hamstrung by an outmoded setup.

The criticism of the Federal buildings by Sir Patrick Abercrombie, that they are cold and monumental is warranted, but I would like to submit that Washington is beautiful in spite of these buildings due to trees, flowers and to L'Enfant's plan. It is not quite fair to judge a city by its buildings alone.

The Hatch Act In Arlington

Considerable indignation has been expressed by supporters of the nonpartisan group in Arlington over the amendment to the Hatch Act which would require the Civil Service Commission to permit partisan along with nonpartisan political activity at the local level.

The nonpartisans take the attitude that they are the virtuous clean-cut fighters against a corrupt political machine, whereas those who favor partisan activity in Arlington are political hacks or ward heelers. Though a few of them are naive enough to believe this, most of them are too intelligent and take the position for the obvious political advantage derived therefrom.

Normally, governmental activities at the local level are nonpartisan in character and as the nonpartisans contend there is no Democratic or Republican philosophy involved in the building of streets and sidewalks. However, there is a major difference in philosophy among Arlingtonians on questions of taxing and spending. Generally speaking the nonpartisan group includes those who favor higher taxes and higher expenditures, whereas, again generally speaking, the local party organizations are the only organized groups to which citizens who are opposed to higher taxation can turn.

However, under the present terms of the Hatch Act, a Government employe cannot support a Democratic or Republican candidate in a public meeting or in print, but he may, as a nonpartisan, attack such a candidate publicly (and many do). A Government employe who attacked the record of a nonpartisan nominee in a local political contest between nonpartisans and Democrats would run the risk of being held in violation of the Hatch Act even if his only motive was to bring to light the nonpartisan's record on taxation. Thus the practical effect of the Hatch Act in its present form is to deprive those Arlington Government employes who favor moderate fiscal policies of effective political means of supporting such policies.

In the election campaign between Democrat Ed Campbell, then chairman of the Arlington County board (Mrs. Edward Campbell is now chairman of the school board) and nonpartisan candidate Dan Dugan (now chairman of the county board), I was strongly in favor of Mr. Campbell. Nonpartisan Government employe friends of mine were able to engage in an active political campaign for Mr. Dugan, but under the one-sided terms of the Hatch Act, I and other Government employes who favored Mr. Campbell were unable even to defend him against misstatements at public meetings without risking prosecution under the Hatch Act.

Naturally the nonpartisans favor the status quo which, as the results of recent elections show, gives them so great a political advantage. However, to my mind no group, even though they be as virtuous as the nonpartisan group in Arlington, should be given an unfair advantage under the law. For these reasons I believe the proposed amendments to the Hatch Act should be adopted.

Ex-Communist Cult

Mr. Jacobs' first name (Milton) in his letter of May 12 inspired me to add a few lines to his perceptive evaluation of the ex-Communist cult. There was once a great poet who knew the peculiar affinity between "isms"; he knew that the greatest hate would arise between "isms" because of their frightening similarity; he would shudder at McCarthy's affinity with the regulators of thought; he would laugh with grim irony at the actions of Budenz—the Budenz who changed from one external "ism" to another—and would know that this change in Budenz required little or no change in his process of thought.

John Milton knew, in the following line, all this over two centuries before the science of psychology. Mr. Milton Jacobs or I existed: "New Presbyter is but Old Priest writ Large."

Planning The Working Life

By Malvina Lindsay

Change Since 1940

"Things aren't as they used to be," complained puzzled devotees of yesterday. But few of these are taking stock as to how social changes of the last few years are affecting their bread and butter plans for tomorrow.

Two chief forces of change are working wives and pension programs. As a recent report of the Census Bureau shows, both husbands and wives work outside the home in 1 out of every 5 couples. In 1940 this ratio was 1 in 10 couples. And as industrial pension programs for retired workers of 65 sprout on all sides, the middle-age workers of 45 to 64, who represent "pension liabilities" if hired, find the getting of jobs harder.

The Census Bureau study reveals how a new pattern of life is developing for the average American women. In many cases she gets a job on leaving school, then marries but continues to work until babies come, then quits for 10 to 15 years, then goes back to work when the children finish grammar school or the oldest child becomes able to take over responsibility at home.

IF SHE IS one of the few who does not need to supplement family income she may take schooling. Some educators looking ahead on this trend are urging establishment of special schools and colleges to meet the needs of mature women whose family duties have lightened, and who want to take a second whirl at high school or college or seek training in new skills. Men forced into retirement early also are prospective material for such schools.

While married women workers today outnumber spipsters by about three million, yet the percentage of women in the child-bearing years, 20 to 34, who take jobs is lower than in 1940. The high marriage and birth rates of the war and postwar periods have increased the proportion of married women in the population and of small children in the home.

One finding of the Census survey has a bearing on future unemployment problems. About one third of unemployed husbands had working wives. In city areas where employment opportunities are generally greater, 2 out of 5 wives of unemployed men were working.

If new job opportunities for men past 45 are sharply curtailed by pension programs, middle-aged wives may increasingly draw the pay checks. For, generally, wives are a few years younger than husbands. Also many fields for the mature woman, such as nursing, work in stores, and the service trades generally, household employment, school teaching, are likely to be short of workers for some time to come.

This changing industrial pattern also could mean a further trek to suburban and semirural areas. The longing for the security of the good earth against the evil day of job uncertainty after 45 will be heightened. And as able-bodied men particularly are retired they will need outlet for their energies.

THIS WORK pattern also means that all girls will need to be trained to be self-supporting, also to have an introduction to skills that may be developed later for sale in the market place. It means that boys also will need to think of their working future in terms of flexibility and change—unless they are to tie up for life with big companies that will keep them after 45, pension them after 65. What is more, a high percentage of women have to think of a prospective term of widowhood in later years when they may be entirely on their own financially.

Many persons lament this developing work pattern. They especially are appalled at the national waste that will develop if job seekers aged 45 to 64 are increasingly shunted out of opportunity. For this is a time when men and women are at the height of their powers.

However this change is what an industrial society is bringing. The individual who, in the pet word of the day, is "realistic" has to plan ahead to adaptation to it. However as a citizen he can by voice and vote protest against what injustices it may bring as a by-product. He can especially insist that industry, labor and Government concern themselves more in opening opportunities for employment and self-expression to persons of middle and later years.

Matter Of Fact

By Stewart Alsop

Robert And Alphonso

IT IS a remarkable experience these days to visit Senator Robert Alphonso Taft. For one thing, the experience is remarkable because Taft is a remarkable man. He is, for instance, a most unsenatorial Senator. He does not favor visitors with gassy repetitions of recent speeches, complete with appropriate gestures. He does not wrap himself in the American flag. He does not indulge in fake camaraderie. Instead, he talks simply and candidly about the issues as he sees them.

But the experience is also remarkable for another reason, for it quite often seems to the visitor that there are two Tafts talking. One is the Taft with a striking intelligence and a deep respect for the facts. The other is the favorite presidential candidate of the isolationist right wing of the Republican Party. Call the two Tafts, for convenience, Robert and Alphonso.

Both Tafts have the same whispy pate, the same long, American-Gothic face, the same flat, downright voice. In the area of domestic policy, Robert and Alphonso are as one, in spirit as well as in the flesh. Taft is a conservative, and he makes no bones about it. But his conservatism is not the pig-headed, fawning reaction of many of those with whom Taft is often unjustly identified. It is a reasoned position, evolved after a close study of the facts. In this area, Robert and Alphonso speak with one voice, and it is a voice which commands respect, however much one may disagree with it.

YET in other areas, the voices of Robert and Alphonso sometimes seem to be arguing rather waspishly with each other. What follows is not an attempt to quote Senator Taft directly. It is rather the impression of the running argument between the two Tafts which one visitor at least has carried away with him.

The Senator is asked what he thinks Senator McCarthy has accomplished.

ROBERT (very flatly and obviously accurately): Zero.

ALPHONSO (hurriedly taking over): It is the Tydings Subcommittee's fault that all those names were made public. Moreover, the investigation has been entirely one-sided.

And so on. Yet the visitor is left with the impression that a part of Senator Taft, at least, is troubled by the identification of McCarthyism with himself and his party. The unpleasant subject is dropped, and the Senator is asked about his views on foreign aid.

ROBERT (again very flatly): Can't just stop foreign spending abruptly when ECA ends. Look at Italy. The government couldn't feed the people. Or look at Germany and Japan. May have to spend as much as two billion dollars a year abroad after ECA.

(This is an intelligent, educated guess at post-ECA requirements. Then Alphonso intervenes.)

ALPHONSO (obviously horrified by what Robert has said): I'm against all this charity abroad. Can't go on handing out billions to foreign governments. Let private enterprise do the job.

THE SENATOR is asked about the Atlantic Pact and European rearmament.

ROBERT: Saw right away what the Atlantic Pact meant. It had no meaning at all without an American commitment to help rearm western Europe, on a much bigger scale than anyone was willing to admit.

(This, again, is entirely accurate. Taft did immediately grasp the real meaning of the Atlantic Pact, and what it would cost to do the job, while many others were too stupid, too timid, or too disingenuous to face the fact.)

ALPHONSO: That was why I voted against the pact. Cost too much. Bad investment. French and Italians would not fight in case of war. British wouldn't either.

But this means that the United States must stand alone, without allies. In this case, must not the United States be very strong indeed?

ROBERT (without hesitation): Of course. I've been deeply disturbed by all these defense cutbacks.

ALPHONSO (quickly): But I'm for economy in the armed services. Anyway, that's something for the experts. Can't be an expert on everything.

THIS DUET does not pretend to be an accurate or complete record of Taft's current views. It is meant rather to record an impression. This is that Taft's extraordinary intelligence is constantly leading him to rational conclusions squarely based on known facts. Then Taft's deeply ingrained political instincts and prejudices take over, and make mince-meat of these conclusions. Thus Alphonso is always winning the running argument with Robert.

Senator Robert Alphonso Taft naturally evokes a mental image of President Robert Alphonso Taft. Yet at least while Alphonso is talking, the image tends to fade. This is for a simple reason. If this country must really stand alone, if we cannot afford to do what must be done, if the rest of the world outside the Soviet sphere is really an untrustworthy and unresisting mush, then the struggle is as good as lost, and our liberties with it. Thus Alphonso is really a counselor of despair. And this country is not ready to, and need not, accept the counsels of despair.

Postlude

William Watkins in Program Of Fine, Varied Organ Music

By Paul Hume

William Watkins played his only Washington recital of the season last night.

He was heard in Calvary Methodist Church, in a benefit for the organ fund of that church. It was the first time we have heard him play since his serious accident of last summer. However, Watkins has been concertizing extensively in the southwest in recent months.

His playing indicates that his injuries left no permanent mark on his ability to make fine music. He chose a good program of handsome variety. Three staples were balanced by rather unfamiliar works. The bulwarks of the evening included the fifth of Handel's organ concertos, Bach's C Major Toccata, Adagio and Fugue, and the B Minor Chorale by Franck.

The last of these is a favorite of the organist, as he himself told his listeners. He played it with greater warmth than his other major offerings. It is a piece in which there is greater drama than was found last night. That may be due to the inadequacy of the instrument in the broad style the piece demands.

In both Handel and Bach rapid movements, we prefer a greater degree of detachment than Watkins employs. It is necessary for clear articulation of such passages as the Handel finale, and the Bach fugue. But his technical skill was apparent throughout the taxing recital. It shone with particular advantage in the Fete, of Langlais, a demanding work which closed a set of three fine, idiomatic pieces.

Contest In Illinois

By Marquis Childs

Truman's Blessing For Lucas

CHICAGO.—You gather from a certain amount of activity that has just gone on here that an election is coming up fairly soon. But whether the big show was primarily concerned with a congressional contest in the fall or a third term for President Truman in '52 is a question, now that the souvenir venders have packed up their wares and the crowd has melted away.

Childs

There is at least one individual who is vitally interested. Senator Scott Lucas of this State is faced with a tough fight to retain his seat and his place as majority leader in the Senate.

The Republican challenger is Everett Dirksen, a former Congressman with a warm, likable personality and a friendly touch with crowds, not unlike that of Truman himself. For many months Dirksen has been going up and down the length and breadth of Illinois talking to big crowds and little crowds on every possible occasion.

Word was sent back to Lucas that he was in trouble, which may be one reason for the timing of the spectacle here. Lucas' position is believed to be stronger today than it was a month ago. And he is feeling more cheerful as a result of the promises and the praise, including Truman's blessing in his windup speech for the "excellent manner" in which Lucas has measured up to the "difficult task" of majority leader.

THERE ARE Fair Dealers in the Senate who would not agree with that praise. They have often in recent weeks grumbled at what they insist is Lucas' failure to go on the offensive and hit back at Republican attackers. They complain that they are held back and discouraged when they want to carry the fight to the enemy.

Lucas is not the crusading type. He inclines in general to the conservative point of view. And this is his election year. As he told a session of national committeemen and Democratic officials:

"The National Committee is not going to tell me what the issues are in this State. I'm going to set the issues myself."

He went on to make clear that one issue he would shun with determination and persistence was the Brannan Farm Plan. The Farm Bureau Federation has nearly 150,000 members in this State and the federation, through its president, Allan Kline, has declared war to the death on the plan that President Truman several times plugged in the course of his Western swing.

In the scales in which victory is weighed, organization would in this State seem to press at least as hard as issues. Jacob M. Arvey, Chicago's Democratic boss, is generally conceded to have a firm grip on the wards that produce the big mass vote. Some even go so far as to say that through a kind of holding company operation, Arvey controls the Republicans as well as the Democratic organization in these wards. And that might mean some kind of "deal" in the fall which would upset Dirksen's bravest hopes.

CERTAINLY, on the organization side, Dirksen is handicapped. Former Gov. Dwight Green, discredited, defeated by a majority that astonished practically everybody, including his opponent, Adlai Stevenson, left behind a lot of wreckage.

What remains of the party organization is torn by conflicts. The results of the debacle of 1948 are still apparent. So Dirksen has pretty much single-handedly been doing the job.

The main issue he has chosen to fight on is a return to isolation, with communism in Government as a sideshow. Dirksen tells his audiences that he believed at one time in the Marshall Plan and European cooperation, but he decided that it was operation rathole—simply a waste of the taxpayers' money. We've got, he says, to take Europe off the dole.

During his tour the President took exactly the opposite line. At almost every stop he told the crowds that America had to help sustain the free nations in order to insure peace in the world. He linked this effort directly with the prosperity and well-being of each community in which he spoke.

Harold Stassen the other day called Truman the best politician and the worst President ever to occupy the White House. The reporters who have gone all the way with the President would be inclined to agree with the first part of that statement. But if Truman's political acumen is of that magnitude, then he must have decided that what the people really want is cooperation and assistance to other nations struggling with the threat of communism.

With due allowance made for the power of organization, Illinois this fall may prove to be a good testing ground for the two points of view. And the outcome is likely to cast a much longer shadow than those of us who are living in this time can possibly appreciate.

directed State Department policy and that it resulted in the loss of China to the Communists. He repeated the accusation, in vitriolic terms, in an Atlantic City speech on Monday.

The facts are, Latimore countered in his speech, that his writings show two distinct categories of conclusions.

The first are those in which he approved specific points of American foreign policy. But in these cases, he said, it can be shown that it was he who had accepted, and was following, official policy previously made by the State Department, and not the other way around.

The second, he continued, is a group of his suggestions that were never accepted by American policy makers.

Referring to the long hearings on his case held before a special Senate Subcommittee, Lattimore said no one seemed interested in these facts.

"Instead, there were various political marchings and countermarchings," he went on.

"One of the most amazing of these was when, in response to the truly nerve-shattering question, 'Are you or have you ever been a Secretary of State?', no less than four of them—Hull, Byrnes, Marshall and Acheson—wheeled into line and discharged a volley to the effect that they had never known me and I had never slipped anything over on them.

"What astonished me most was that not one of them made a simple, forthright statement to the effect that he made his own foreign policy, drew on what advice he saw fit in doing so, and took the responsibility for it.

"It was taken for granted throughout the hearings that I must in fact have had a heavy impact on policy in China and the Far East, and that the best I should be able to do for myself would be to plead that I had got the State Department only a little bit pregnant."

Most of Lattimore's address was devoted, however, to argument that there is a clear and present danger that in the United States "we are beginning to reflect in our own conduct that which we abhor in Russia," that is, thought-control.

He reminded his listeners how orthodoxy in all thought, whether scientific or social, is demanded in Russia, and how all articles have to be "certified" by the writing in of praise to Stalin and Marxism.

But now in America, he declared, "freedom of inquiry and freedom to express an opinion based on independent research have become dangerous.

"The threat to these rights and liberties is a somber fact," Lattimore said. "Minority pressure groups are running wild. They are trying to establish, and to an alarming extent have actually succeeded in imposing, forms of thought control which are the more sinister for being entirely without legal definition or validity."

In "loyalty" cases, Lattimore said, "a really vicious standard is rapidly being established. More and more, like the Russians, we are asking, 'how long is it since you last denounced the Russians? In your recent monograph on the pottery of the Hopi Indians why did you not insert an irrelevant but zealous glorification of the American way? Can you produce evidence of having been denounced, within the last six months, by the American Communists? When were you last attacked in a Russian publication?'"

Lattimore warned that a teacher or writer would be intimidated by witch-hunting and would be tempted to give his opinions "just that little servile twist that will make him personally safe."

"When the presentation of unpalatable knowledge becomes dangerous to the individual, the state itself is endangered," he concluded.

Lattimore was introduced by Prof. Georoge Boas, chairman of the faculty committee that convened the dinner. Said Boas:

"Owen Lattimore has been accused of being a spy on the word of confessed traitors, of being a liar on the word of confessed perjurers. . . . Every decent American has lived in shame during the last few weeks to see the mockery made of American tradition by men sworn to defend it."

Meantime, in Washington, Senator Francis J. Myers, acting Democratic leader, accused McCarthy of a "deliberate and malicious" attempt to undermine United States leadership in world affairs.

He said the Wisconsin Republican's campaign against the State Department is "reckless" and is motivated by politics. It would "undermine America's leadership in foreign affairs and jeopardize our constructive efforts towards world peace," Myers said.

The Pennsylvania's attack, one of the most blistering yet delivered by a Democrat, was touched off by McCarthy's demand in his Atlantic City speech that President Truman fire Secretary of State Dean Acheson and other "prancing mimics of the Moscow party line."

Myers said Acheson, now in Europe, was attending "a most important conference" with Foreign Ministers of other nations that was intended "to further strengthen the free world against Communist aggression and infiltration.

"This reckless and political demany for his resignation," he said, "is a deliberate and malicious attempt to undermine America's leadership in foreign affairs . . ."

Senator Brewster (R., Me.), on the other hand, gave support to McCarthy's criticism of Acheson.

"For the good of the country," Brewster said in an interview, "it ought to be possible to secure men (as Secretary of State) who would command more general confidence and do the job that is required in this very critical time."

Brewster, chairman of the Republican Senatorial campaign committee, said he thought both Republican and Democratic Senators had shown a lack of confidence in Acheson's foreign policies.

McCarthy told the diamond jubilee of the Sons of the American Revolution that Acheson, while "pretending" to fight communism, found an "axis" with Lattimore and Ambassador-at-Large Phillip C. Jessup to deliver the Far East and the Pacific to the Communists.

It was a "vicious hoax and fraud," he said, in which the "axis" plan was "murder, but make it look like suicide."

GOP, White House Picketed

Striking United Press telegraphers yesterday picketed the White House, National Republican headquarters, The Washington Post, and stations WTOP and WWDC to protest use of UP wire service facilities.

The AFL Commercial Telegraphers called the Nation-wide strike two weeks ago in a wage dispute with the news service. Twenty-one union members, working for the UP bureau here, are participating in the walkout and have maintained a continuous picket line at the National Press Bldg., where the UP office is located.

In the past several days, the local telegraphers have been temporarily picketing users of the UP service. Monday, they picketed Democratic National Headquarters. Yesterday the White House was added to the picketing list because, according to union officials, Dr. John R. Steelman, presidential assistant, and Charles G. Ross, press secretary, have UP tickers in their offices.

Meanwhile, Representative John A. Blatnik (D., Minn.) proposed a congressional investigation of the strike, charging that strikebreakers have been hired by UP to replace "supervisory scabs." In New York, United Press had no comment on Blatnik's statement.

In Draper Suit

Juror Asks Budenz of Data Source

Hartford, Conn., May 16 (AP).—A juryman spoke up today at the Adler-Draper libel trial to demand where former Communist Louis Budenz got the information he said he possessed.

Budenz, a witness for Mrs. Hester McCullough, whom the entertainers are suing for $200,000, had testified last week that Dancer Paul Draper and Harmonica Player Larry Adler were "Communist entertainers."

Just before Budenz left the stand today, Arthur Sebert of South Coventry, Conn., an alternate juror, wanted to know on what the witness based his charge.

The information, Budenz said, "came from many sources and artists, like Paul Robeson, a writer like Howard Fast, a newspaperman like Carl Randau."

The juror asked: "Did they say that to you directly?"

"Yes, sir," replied Budenz.

Budenz, former managing editor of the Communist Daily Worker, now is a Fordham University professor.

The entertainers claim that Mrs. McCullough of Greenwich, Conn., damaged their reputations when she called them pro-Communist.

Counsel for the entertainers tried during the day to bring out excerpts from a May 12 speech in the United States Senate in which Senator Chavez (D., N. M.) called Budenz "America's No. 1 professional witness."

After the defense objected, Federal Judge J. Joseph Smith ruled that the Chavez speech "would be a second-hand denunciation of this witness" and not admissible.

A deposition by John Huber, self-described former FBI undercover man, was introduced. In it, Huber said he concluded Draper was a Communist "because of meeting him with so many Communists."

"I do know he had been connected with Communist fronts for many years," Huber's statement said.

The place of security

There is a realm where hope is no longer precarious. It is the realm of unwavering understanding—spiritual understanding. It is the realm of Truth.

How may we find it? Through knowing (understanding) the same truth which Jesus knew, and which he promised would "make us free." The Christian Science textbook plainly shows the way. To any sincere student this great book steadily unlocks the treasures of truth in the Bible and shows how they are practical.

Furthermore, its statements can be put to the test. It proves, by healing the sick, that the same truth Jesus knew is here. It is available today to meet humanity's need through the effective prayer of understanding.

You are cordially invited to visit a Christian Science Reading Room where this book and Mrs. Eddy's other writings, together with the Bible and all authorized Christian Science literature, may be read, borrowed or purchased.

Mutual Gains Seen In Schuman Proposal

By Ysabel and Robert Rennie

French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman has proposed that Germany and France merge their production of coal and steel. He has presented only the skeleton of an idea, but it is a plan that has fired a sympathetic response by its boldness and imagination.

The suggestion is to pool the coal and steel production of both countries under an international authority. The stated aim: to modernize production, expand joint exports in foreign markets, and supply coal and steel on equal terms to all countries joining the agreement. Trade among member countries in steel and coal would be exempt from customs duties and freight differentials.

But French production has been high-cost, and German production low-cost, so Schuman proposes certain "transitional measures" as he calls them. These include a "production and investment plan," a "mechanism for equalizing prices," and a reconversion fund to rationalize production.

This is the skeleton of the Schuman plan, the bones of which have yet to be clothed in solid flesh. What is the plan likely to look like in actual operation?

Gain for Both

Both France and Germany could gain politically from such a merger. For France it looks like insurance against the war potential of the German steel industry. Germany has tried to get her production ceiling lifted from 11.2 million tons to 14.5 million by 1952. In the absence of controls, France has had to say no.

For Germany, held down by the pressure of occupation policies, the plan appeals as a first invitation to sit as equal partner in decisions affecting her future. It opens avenues of growth and reconstruction, perhaps of ultimate escape.

It is the economic advantages that appeal most strongly to Americans like ECA Administrator Paul Hoffman. European recovery has been hobbled and retarded by a trend to national autarchy. The situation of steel is but a single example of the problem.

France has iron ore, but depends for coal on Germany and Britain. Britain and Germany have coal, but buy their ore in France or Sweden. Before the war there was also a substantial cross-movement in the exchange of coals of different qualities.

This trade made for mutual dependence, but need not have made for high steel costs. What has happened, however, has been a double-pricing mechanism which has hit at everyone. Britain and Germany charged a low coal price to domestic users, a much higher price to foreigners. In November, 1949, a German steel plant paid $7.14 a ton for German coking fines, while a French user was charged $11.90.

Double-pricing worked the other way, too. France held down the price of ores in France, but charged the export market what the traffic would bear.

Price differentials shut off the cross-trade in different qualities of coal. Carried over into finished steel, the same mechanism threatened normal trade in steel itself.

As French and German steel plants hiked their export prices, small nations, normally their customers, laid plans for their own steel production. If all present plans, economic and uneconomic, are carried through, Europe will by 1953 have some 8 million tons of excess steel capacity. The continent is far too poor to waste scarce resources in this foolish fashion.

For all these difficulties the Schuman plan could provide solutions. From this point of view it is a constructive proposal.

Some Words of Caution

It would be unrealistic, however, to present the positive side without some words of caution. Though the French Foreign Minister was at pains to say his plan was no cartel, there are inherent dangers in such a structure.

The obvious question is the pricing policy of this authority. Schuman speaks of "a mechanism for equalizing prices." At what level? Does this mean a price to cover the highest-cost producers in the highest-cost countries? How would you equalize prices without defeating the aim of higher efficiency?

A fixed price carries dangers to the consumer, whose interests are seldom consulted, and to the industry itself. It provides little incentive for inefficient plants to cut costs.

Finally, what about the "production plan" to which Schuman so vaguely refers? With excess capacity already in sight, this would certainly mean restrictive production quotas.

More Information on Cancer Advocated for Older Groups

A Washington cancer specialist yesterday issued a plea to all persons under 45 here to tell their parents and grandparents something of the facts of cancer.

Dr. Ralph M. Caulk, medical director of the Garfield Memorial Hospital cancer detection clinic, in urging the action, based his plea on clinical statistics from the 1949 operation.

The number of cases of cancer uncovered for the year might have been doubled, or even tripled, if the average age of those examined were in the 50's instead of 38, the age average recorded, he declared.

Of the 1618 men and women examined during the year, he said, the under-45 age group predominated.

"Here at the clinic," he declared, "we'd like to see more men and women in their 60's and 70's. These age groups seem to be very difficult to reach. It's hard to explain why.

"Educational differences in the age group," he added, "may be the chief reason because, in general, we find the younger groups better informed on health precautions and more aware of community health programs.

"In order to reach the older groups, we may be forced to depend on those born since the turn of the century to get their parents and grandparents to make use of the facilities of the cancer detection clinic."

He pointed out the well-established fact that the incidence of cancer in the population increases with age.

During 1949, Dr. Gaulk reported, the clinic examined 1618 symptom-free persons for cancer, and uncovered 18 cases, at least two of which were in a moderately advanced stage. Some 1078 were found to have pre-cancerous conditions, and 1158 had other conditions which justified medical attention, he said. Many had both precancerous conditions and others requiring attention.

All were referred to their attending physicians for further diagnostic care and treatments.

Dr. Caulk explained that the term "precancerous condition" is a broad one encompassing "any condition which might conceivably develop into cancer." Included are lumps or growths of any kind, changing pigmented moles, intestinal polyps, skin lesions, white patches on mucous membranes, and suspicious cells revealed in microscopic study of sample excretions.

The Garfield cancer detection clinic, organized in December, 1946, is one of six here supported by the District Cancer Society.

The Gallup Poll

Proposed Bill to List Reds Favored by Most U. S. Voters

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., May 16.—The provision in the Mundt-Nixon bill that would require members of the Communist Party or Communist organizations in this country to register with the Justice Department meets with the overwhelming approval of United States voters questioned in a recent Nation-wide survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion.

The Mundt-Nixon bill, which has received committee approval, has been placed on the Senate's calendar and may be brought up for debate in coming weeks.

Voters questioned in a national survey favor such a law by a ratio of more than 3 to 1.

One interesting aspect of the survey is that the vote today is less than was found in a survey using a similar question conducted last year shortly after the conviction of the 11 Communist leaders in the trial presided over by Federal Judge Harold L. Medina.

However, sentiment for the measure is still overwhelming as the following trend indicates:

"There is a bill now before Congress which would not stop anyone from belonging to the Communist Party — but it would require every individual who belongs to the Communist Party or Communist organizations to register (file his name) with the Justice Department in Washington. Do you think Congress should or should not pass this bill?"

	August 1948	Dec. 1949	Today's Survey
Favor registration	63%	77%	67%
Do not favor	22	11	20
No opinion	15	12	13
	100%	100%	100%

The ratio of those who favor this step as compared to those who oppose it is somewhat smaller among persons who have had college training than among others in the population, the survey finds.

However, all education levels vote approval, as follows:

	College	High Sch'l	Grade Sch'l
Favor registration	65%	70%	65%
Do not favor	29	20	17
No opinion	6	10	18
	100%	100%	100%

Staff Head Is Named by Crime Probers

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

Harold G. Robinson, chief investigator for the California Crime Commission, yesterday was named to head the investigating staff of the Senate Crime Committee.

Robinson

A former FBI agent who also worked with the Truman war investigating committee, Robinson was described by Senator Kefauver (D., Tenn.), head of the crime committee, as "the best man in the country for the job."

Rudolph Halley, the Crime Committee's chief counsel, also worked for the Truman Committee at the time Robinson was one of its investigators.

The California Crime Commission has been a leader in battling activities in that State of the reputed crime syndicates, especially in the horse race betting rackets, and their use of the Nation-wide race wire service. Robinson's appointment makes it apparent the Senate committee will probe deeply into the race wire business, already the subject of a preliminary investigation by a Senate Commerce subcommittee.

Meanwhile, Halley was busy yesterday lining up what he called the nucleus of his staff, perhaps three or four assistants who will help him wade through many applications to pick the rest of the group to conduct the $150,000 probe. All staff members eventually will go through FBI checks.

Halley reported receiving a congratulatory note and a pledge of cooperation from George Morris Fay, United States attorney for the District. Halley said no specific matters were mentioned.

Unidentified Man Kills Self Near Berkeley Springs

Berkeley Springs, W. Va., May 16 (AP).—A middle-aged man was found dying of a bullet wound in the head along U. S. 522 near here today.

State's Attorney S. D. Helsey of Morgan County said the man apparently shot himself with a .22-caliber revolver which was found nearby. He died two hours later in Memorial Hospital here without regaining consciousness.

A car was parked about 100 yards from where the man was found. Inside was an envelope addressed to "Ernest R. Leach." There was no address. There was no license tags on the car.

The tattoed initials "E. R. L." were on one of the man's arms.

The man, about 50, was partially bald, had a large forehead and a slender face, and was about 5 feet 10. He weighed around 165 pounds.

Printers' Union Votes On President Today

Indianapolis, May 16 (AP).—A bitter campaign for control of the printer's union will reach a climax Wednesday when new officers are elected.

More than 65,000 members of the International Typographical Union in the United States and Canada are to vote in the 700-odd locals.

Woodruff Randolph of Chicago is seeking his fourth two-year term as head of the union with C. G. Sparkman of Detroit opposing him. Randolph heads the Progressive Party slate, Sparkman that of the Independent Party.

Winnipeg's Dikes Feared Weakening

Winnipeg, Manitoba, May 16 (AP).—The crest of the Red River flood pounded Winnipeg today and a high city official warned that the dikes show signs of collapse.

J. W. Sanger, general manager of the city's municipal power authority, said the mud carried by the flood is acting as a lubricant, causing sandbag barricades to slip and slide.

Sandbags guarding Winnipeg's north end slipped 8 inches during the day and a 24-hour watch was posted to guard against disaster.

Brig. R. E. A. Moton, flood commander, warned that collapse of the dikes could bring unimaginable tragedy to this prairie city of 350,000.

The Weather Bureau said rainstorms were moving into the area and would complicate the serious situation. Snow started to fall at nearby Brandon.

The river's crest, however, seemed unlikely to go above the 30.1 feet now slashing at the levels.

Despite the warnings of peril, evacuation of the city slowed. Although 80,000 to 100,000 persons have fled, the rest of the population appeared determined to trust to the dikes which have protected them now for over two weeks.

Soper at Health Parley

Dr. Fred L. Soper, director of the Pan-American Sanitary Bureau, regional office of the World Health Organization, has left Washington to attend the third World Health Assembly in Geneva, Switzerland, it was announced yesterday.

Driver Held in Traffic Death

A District coroner's jury yesterday ordered a 27-year-old truck driver held for the grand jury at an inquest of two early April traffic deaths.

Held for further action was George A. Branch, driver of a Mazo Bros., Inc., panel truck whose address was listed as 716 55th st. ne.

Testimony at the inquest charged that Branch was driving under the influence of alcohol and drove through a red light when he collided with a Gray Top cab at 4th st. and Independence ave. sw., April 1.

Miss Josephine Hebard, 28, of 2519 Congress st. se., died of injuries suffered in the crash. Cabbie James J. Shelton, 39, of 3611 Warder st. nw., and two passengers also were injured.

The jury also ruled that Frank Joe Bauer, 55, of 1943 New York ave. ne., committed suicide when he ran into the path of a Greyhound bus at New York ave. and 9th st. ne., April 3.

50 Passengers Shaken As B&O Trains Bump

Baltimore, May 16 (AP).—Fifty passengers were shaken up today when three sleepers of the Baltimore and Ohio's westbound Metropolitan Special were sideswiped by derailed cars of a passing freight. No one was injured.

The accident was on a curve just outside Camden Station yards at the southwest corner of the business district.

The special had just left Baltimore on its run from New York to Washington, Cumberland, Md., Clarksburg, W. Va., Cincinnati and St. Louis.

Chalk Up an Error For Eddie Horton

By Richard L. Coe

EDWARD EVERETT HORTON seems to be trying to do for Edward Everett Horton what Margaret Webster's been doing for Shakespeare. He ought to take some lessons from Peggy.

The trick is to whittle a play into form compact enough to barnstorm into spots where you don't expect to find live theater. Compared to Eddie's setup, Miss Webster is running a five-ring circus. Peggy's 30-odd associates, plus scenery, costumes and props, load into buses and trucks, head for the hinterland.

This week you'll find Eddie and three other actors on the stage of the Shirlington, normally devoted to the cinema. He was right popular some weekends ago out there in his perennial "Springtime for Henry," but this time he's brought Frederick Lonsdale's comedy of 1927, "On Approval."

The journey's not necessary; in fact, its only reward is the knowledge that if you'd tried hard, you couldn't have had a flatter evening in the theater.

Apart from the fundamental mistake of assuming that "On Approval" was worth reviving (at least, not worth reviving without Beatrice Lillie to play her movie role), Horton's part doesn't allow him the happy mugging moments he enjoys as Henry. Except for Matthew Smith, who's pretty good, the rest of the company might rate approval in little theater circles of Squedunk. And even Squedunk would probably have some hard-shelled sophisticates who've been to a movie.

Adding to the fact that you know you're at something sleazy is the makeshift set on the Shirlington stage. This was supplied by the well-meaning Shirlington Players, who couldn't have known it was going to rain on their scenery in transit. The fact remains, it's the worst approximation ever imagined of a smart London flat or a shooting lodge in Scotland.

While the Horton prices are exceedingly modest compared with bigtime theater, the entire production is something both you—and Mr. Horton—should carefully avoid.

STEVE COCHRAN, whose managerial career at the National and the Olney, which he started, made him a familiar figure to a generation of Washington theatergoers, is in for a unique honor Sunday night . . . His old friend, Marion D. Venable, is dedicating her Ballet Soiree that evening at the Gayety to him, and she knows that his other pals will want to be on deck to give him a hand . . . It's to be his first public bow since returning from the Coast and that traffic accident, though the sharp-eyed have picked him out of several audiences.

THAT 150,000TH DP arrival, whose picture you saw yesterday, is 12-year-old Dace Epermanis, Latvian-born, and she'll be seeing tonight's showing of "The Big Lift" from a Palace Theater loge at 9 o'clock . . . One of the first things this youngster did on arriving in the States was to talk about the Berlin airlift . . . Now she's a guest of the Sesqui, and when Star Montgomery Clift heard she would be in Washington, he asked Carter Barron to invite her to the picture . . . For her first date at an American movie, she'll be escorted by four Eagle Scouts of Washington.

CROSS ROADS Theater, Virginia, will be open this summer as usual, though longtime Producer Irma Gordon is now Irma G. Dumville and living out West. . . . There'll be tryouts Sunday afternoon from 2 till 6 at the theater; you get A. B. W. buses from 12th and the Avenue.

THE SIXTY-SIXTH anniversary of the Ringling Circus will be observed the day after the Ringling Brothers-Barnum and Bailey combined shows open here. The land's No 1 circus fan, Melvin D. Hildreth, and his wife will toss a birthday party at their home Friday afternoon.

CHALK UP a third week for "Salt to the Devil" at the new Plaza . . . Very much a part of the opening bill is "Fiddle De Dee," a Canadian Film Board short of color and music abstractions and first prize winner in its classification at the Brussels Film Festival.

WOLFE KAUFMAN, the drama critic turned advanced courier for "Brigadoon," is the most relieved man in town. . . . He's found—after ten days' labor—hotel rooms—90-odd—for the company of the musical, biggest show in 47 years to play the Gayety. . .. If you've had out-of-town visitors looking for a bunk, you know this is the toughest time of the Washington hotel year, and so can appreciate that pleased look on the face of MacWolfe MacKaufman.

SHIRLEY BOOTH, so fine in New York's "Come Back, Little Sheba," has a third honor in as many weeks to her string. . . . She won out over Helen Hayes, Lynn Fontanne, Katharine Hepburn and Jean Arthur as the season's finest actress in Variety's annual poll of the Gotham dailies.

Latvian Girl, 150,000th DP, Greeted Here

By Arthur Edson
The Associated Press

Dace Epermanis, a puzzled but game 12-year-old Latvian girl who is the 150,000th displaced person to reach these shores, held a news conference yesterday and disclosed that:

She likes television very much.

She likes New York City very much.

She likes America very much.

A cute blonde, with her long hair in braids, Dace (pronounced "Dahtze") is being given the all-out treatment, as befitting the 150,000th displaced person to arrive here.

She was brought to Washington by the National Capital Sesquicentennial Commission, an outfit set up to help the District celebrate its 150th birthday.

The Sesqui people have a week-long program lined up for her that would stagger an ox. It includes everything from meeting the Governors of Virginia and Maryland to getting an honorary membership in the 4-H Club.

All of which is quite a load for a little girl who has spent five of her 12 years in a displaced persons camp.

But she is bearing up well, as is her family.

This includes her father, Bernhards, and a 15-year-old brother, Juris, who has decided he'd rather be known as George. Father and George have gone on to Perry, N. Y., to work on a dairy farm.

Dace and Mrs. Epermanis—like Dace, she's a nice looking blonde—came here.

Approximately eight quick-tongued press agents were present for the news conference, and they were so fast with the answers that it was hard to hear soft-voiced Dace.

Government Rests in Bell Tax Case

Baltimore, May 16 (AP).—The Government completed its case today against Benjamin S. Bell, Washington art dealer accused of attempting to evade $55,813 in income taxes for three wartime years.

Defense attorneys prepared to complete their arguments Wednesday for a court-directed dismissal. The case is being heard in Federal court by a jury.

Most of today's session was spent in cross-examination of the chief Government witness, Charles Knight, a special agent of the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

Knight testified that Bell's net earnings increased from $82,218 at the end of 1942 to $201,482 at the end of 1945.

The Government contends that Bell's net earnings for the years 1943, 1944 and 1945 were $136,154. He reported his net for the three years in question was $43,699.

Bell lives at 9707 Old Georgetown rd., and is president of Washington Art Galleries and Auction Rooms, Inc., 722 13th st. nw.

Alexandria to Auction 8 Police Motorcycles

Eight Alexandria police motorcycles, no longer used since the city's cycle traffic police were "grounded" last month, will be auctioned at 11 a.m. Saturday at the city repair shop, 418 N. Pitt st., Alexandria.

They will be auctioned individually and then in a group, and the highest total price bid will be accepted.

Citrus Men Fight Truck Weight Law

By The Associated Press

A group of Florida officials and citrus growers plan to go to Richmond, Va., today to ask relief from Virginia's truck weight restrictions.

They will seek a meeting with Virginia Highway Commissioner James Anderson.

The decision to put their case up to Anderson was made after an all-day session yesterday, attended by representatives of the citrus industry and national trucking and highway associations in Washington.

The growers plan to "lay their cards on the table," giving Anderson a picture of what they describe as an emergency situation.

Virginia, in recent weeks, has been conducting a round-the-clock check on trucks traveling its highways, with arrests of drivers carrying in excess of the 50,000-pound gross load limit fixed by the State Legislature. The drivers have been fined from $10 to $1600, the growers reported.

Gordon Stedman, executive secretary of the Growers and Shippers League of Orlando, Fla., said trucks need to carry loads in excess of 50,000 pounds in order to move perishable fruits and vegetables and fruit juices, as well as to show a profit.

He said an emergency situation now existed and would continue for at least six weeks.

County Road Plan Adopted

The Prince Georges County Commissioners yesterday approved a road-construction program in excess of $400,000 for the fiscal year 1950-51.

The action came at the board's weekly meeting in Marlboro.

Under new construction, the program lists 23 projects at an estimated cost of $218,800.

In addition, new bituminous surfacing is scheduled for 61 projects totaling 64.6 miles at a cost of approximately $193,700.

Largest single item in the new construction program is $26,500 for completion of the Floral Park rd. from Piscataway to T. B. This includes construction of a bridge and fill and 1.2 miles of roadway.

Construction of two bridges is included in the $20,000 allocated for 1.6 miles of the Old Louise Merson rd. from State Highway 198 to Brooklyn Branch rd. near Laurel.

Another $20,000 project is a 1-mile stretch of Walker Mill rd. between Marlboro pike and County rd. in District Heights.

Other roads listed for construction in the coming year include Odell rd. from Powder Mill rd. to Old Baltimore blvd.; Quincy st. from River rd. to Landover rd.; Cool Spring rd. from University lane to Riggs rd.; Glen Arden pkwy. from George M. Palmer hwy. to Ardmore-Brightseat rd.; Carter Hall rd. from United States Route 301 southeast for one mile; Lottsford-Vista rd. from George M. Palmer hwy. south for one mile.

Also, Good Luck rd. from Edmonston rd. to Auburn ave.; Bigelow rd. from Van Dusen rd. to Muirkirk rd.; Dangerfield rd. extended to Surratt rd. at Chelt[illegible]am; Old Marshall Hall rd. from Accokeek rd. to New [illegible] Tanyard rd. from Nottingham to River rd.; Pisgah Church rd. from Riggs rd. to the Montgomery County line, and Horsehead rd. from Baden to the Charles County line.

Keyserling Faces Test: To Find Niche for Economic Advisers

By J. A. Livingston

THE real misfortune of the President's Council of Economic Advisers is not that its first chairman, Edwin G. Nourse, and its first vice chairman, Leon Keyserling, could not agree.

Nor is it that Nourse resigned and left Keyserling to carry on, nor that the newly appointed third member, Roy Blough of the University of Chicago is a pragmatist, whose economic philosophy goes nicely with that of Truman and Keyserling. (That's undoubtedly why Blough was picked to fill the Nourse vacancy.) No, the tragedy of the council has been, and is, that it was created to meet an economic crisis which never came.

Livingston

The council was the creature of the post-World War I and 1929 depressions. We were going to have another 1920-21. So Congress passed the Employment Act of 1946 to arm the President and Congress with advisers against depression. But, instead of unemployment and low prices, the United States had full employment and high prices. We worry about Russia, not deflation.

The council was and is like a fire department in a fireless town—willing but unsung. Heroes are not made standing by—nor are great organizations. Nourse, Keyserling and Clark never were drawn together by a common overwhelming disaster, calling for concerted action. They never had to put out an economic fire.

TO MAKE headlines, to get the council into the public eye, they had to create issues and problems. For such a role, Nourse was singularly unsuited. By training as a college professor and researcher at Brookings Institution, he was far more acclimated to the passive role as an aloof economic adviser to the President. Keyserling, a lawyer and political protege of Senator Robert Wagner (D., N. Y.), is accustomed to the hurly-burly and infighting of Government, of influencing people at the top. He's a sloganeer. He constantly sounds the rallying cry: We must have an expanding economy. It goes big with labor—and Truman.

Now that Keyserling is chairman, the council will undergo a change in character. Keyserling believes that the council should speak up for the President's economic ideas and policies both in and outside Government. The council will become the protagonist—the advocate—of Administration policies. Nourse had contemplated that the council, if need be, could be the critic of the Administration, but always within the Administration.

BLOUGH REALIZES that professional independence, for a group of economists within the Administration, has its limits. At the annual meeting of the American Economic Association in December, he delivered a paper on the role of the council, which said: "The council is in a difficult spot. It must be independent, but not so independent as to undermine the President. The risk is that the council may push too hard, get pendence, lose its position as presidential adviser, or lose its neck." Nourse, it might be noted, lost his position. Blough, it may be assumed, will be more flexible, or he would have turned down the job.

Blough also said: "A stable economy will not satisfy us (the American people) unless it has more than stability. We want also a high level of employment, ready adaptation of the economy to new tastes and conditions, economic progress and a large measure of personal freedom. Thus Blough is an exponent of the Keyserling-Truman economic doctrine of ever-onward, ever-upward expansion.

UNDER KEYSERLING, the council may become far more influential than under Nourse. Keyserling, Clark and Blough have been brought up in the school of policy-doing. They know that in government you can't count on somebody else to carry out your policies, not even if the President okays them. You must be prepared to bull your ideas through, administratively.

There's danger in that role. The council may push too hard, get embroiled with other members of the President's executive family, and become tangled up in politics and taking sides. That's hardly the atmosphere for objective economic thinking. If that happens, the council will be just another Government agency, struggling for power and influence.

But the danger also presents an opportunity. Keyserling can rise to his new responsibility and can demonstrate that it's possible to be wise and objective and at the same time influential. We'll see.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, May 16 (AP).—Weakness in soybeans unsettled other futures at the Board of Trade today, but not until May wheat with May and July oats had scored new seasonal highs.

Soybeans were under liquidation in the nearby contracts after a showing of firmness at the start. Feed grains also started firm and withstood selling in some deliveries, but wheat was inclined to follow the action of soybeans in a modest manner.

At the close wheat was 1 cent to 1⅞ lower. Corn was ⅛ to 1¼ lower. Oats were ⅜ higher to 1⅝ lower. Rye was 1½ to 2 cents lower. Soybeans were 1¾ to 3 cents lower and lard was 15 to 28 cents a hundredweight lower.

Chest Orders Needy Patient List Trimming

The Community Chest Federation last night directed the Hospital Service Agency to trim the number of needy patients it certifies each month for hospital care under Chest aid.

For this year the federation set aside $452,000 for hospitalization care and made monthly allocations to HSA.

Chauncy G. Parker, president of the National Capital area federation, issued the belt-tightening statement, declaring HSA would wind up with $150,000 deficit at the end of this year unless the agency establishes stricter eligibility requirements for semiindigent patients it clears for hospitalization.

To achieve a balanced budget, Chest and HSA officials have informally proposed that:

1. No Chest money will be extended to those holding Group Hospitalization, Inc., contracts after benefits under their policies have expired.

2. Bar from Chest aid persons injured in accidents in which they stand a reasonable chance of collecting claims.

3. Give no approval to persons who come here from outside the area of Community Chest solicitation.

4. Place a limitation on the number of days of hospitalization paid for.

Parker said the federation, largely because of this year's reduced campaign goal and a post-campaign contribution fall-off, would not have available funds to meet HSA's impending deficit.

Individual hospitals have "given assurances," said Parker, that they will continue to serve emergency cases of semimedically indigent patients and will "consider the needs of such applicants who may be among those HSA cannot certify because of the current budget limitation."

Following Parker's announcement, Willard Smith, HSA administrator, said he may be forced to institute "even more drastic" measures to meet the federation's policy statement.

Specifically, the federation said HSA must limit each month's certifications for hospital care to the amount of money on hand each month in the hospitalization fund.

As of yesterday, HSA had committed its entire May allocation to patients already certified or in hospitals.

County SPCA Quits Animal Welfare Unit

Annapolis, Md., May 16 (AP).—The Anne Arundel County SPCA said today it would withdraw from the Maryland Animal Welfare Association because of conflicting views over the use of dogs for medical research.

Members voted unanimously yesterday to leave the State group, which is opposed to the use for research of any dogs unclaimed at pounds.

Albert H. MacCarthy, a central figure in a dogs-research controversy last year, was reelected president.

The Anne Arundel Society voted unanimously to favor the use of stray dogs in research but only under the strict supervision of humane society agents. This subscribed to the view held by MacCarthy.

Move to Curb Drug Shipments Approved

Steps toward control of international shipments of synthetic drugs that might be habit-forming were taken by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee yesterday.

It approved a protocol that would bring the synthetic drugs under provisions of a 1931 international agreement on traffic in narcotics.

'Automats' Sell Apparel, Toys At Bus Station

Boston, May 16 (AP).—A Boston specialty shop has mechanized its celebrated self-service bargain basement idea in a big bus terminal.

William Filene's Sons, Inc., reported today it had 14 automatic machines working overtime to provide travelers with underwear, gloves, costume jewelry and toys. A store spokesman called it a retail "automat"—the first of its kind in the country.

Travelers were lining up today in the Greyhound terminal to put from 50 cents to $2 in the slot machines. Out came their choice of 20 packaged items.

The solitary salesmen attendant reported a run on ladies' nylon panties and men's T-shirts at the "U-Serve-U" establishment, at $1.65 and $1.25 respectively.

A Filene's official reported first-day sales "bigger than we expected."

But he said it would take at "least a year" before the firm would know whether it hit the jackpot with its automatic vending store.

Mrs. Nolte's Body Found In Potomac

The body of Mrs. Gertrude Fanny Nolte, 46, who has been missing from her Seat Pleasant, Md., home at 524 Carmody Hills dr., since March 2, was found yesterday in the Potomac off Giesboro Point.

Her husband, Charles, 55, a Washington cab driver, identified the body at the District Morgue through scars, police said. The body was badly decomposed.

Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner, issued a certificate of suicide. Maryland State police said Mrs. Nolte had been despondent for several years because of a spinal injury that failed to respond to treatment.

Nolte told police that he returned home from work March 2 to find his wife gone. She had left letters addressed to her husband, police and a physician, the police reported.

United Europe Movement Hails Schuman's Plan

London, May 16 (AP).—Winston Churchill's United Europe movement hailed the French coal-steel pool proposal tonight and praised its originator, French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman, for his "historic initiative."

The statement said the European Unity Movement has "long advocated an approach of this kind as a contribution not only to economic equilibrium but to the political stability and unity of Europe."

President of Hungary Tried to Flee by Plane

Vienna, May 16 (U.P.).—The Catholic People's Party newspaper Neue Wiener Tageszeitung today reported President Arpad Szakasits of Hungary was arrested and ousted from his post when he tried to flee to Switzerland.

The newspaper said Szakasits was seized three weeks ago on orders of Matyas Rakosi, Hungarian Communist chief. It said Szakasits tried to flee when he discovered he was under secret police surveillance.

An official Budapest announcement April 26 said Szakasits had resigned because of ill health.

Lowest-built...that's why Hudson means

Most room! Best ride! Safest!

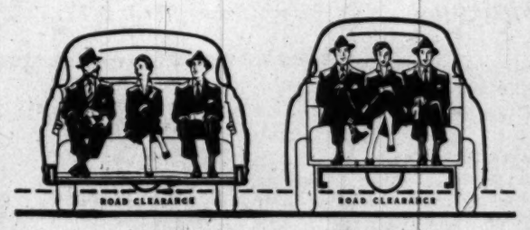
NO MATTER what price you have in mind for your next new car, there is a Hudson right in your range.

And every Hudson series and model brings you exclusive advantages . . . possible because Hudson is the lowest-built car of all!

The secret is Hudson's exclusive recessed floor ("step-down" design). Through this new way to build automobiles, space wasted in all other cars is brought into Hudson's passenger compartment.

Most room! Seat cushions are up to 12 inches wider than in cars of greater outside dimensions—and there is more head room than in any other automobile.

Best ride! Safest! Right along with full road clearance, Hudson's recessed floor makes possible the lowest center of gravity in any American automobile. As a result, this remarkable car handles more surely, hugs the road tighter and provides America's best and safest ride!



Hudson's exclusive "step-down" design, with its recessed floor, uses space that all other cars waste. The result is America's lowest center of gravity (and full road clearance), while providing more head and seating room than any other car.

There are many more Hudson advantages, including your choice of power-packed, high-compression, six- or eight-cylinder engines world-famous for stamina and performance . . . and scores of high-quality, long-life features that make "step-down" designed Hudsons leaders in resale value, as shown by Official Used Car Guide Books.

the NEW amazing Cities Service fuel oil with the new miracle ingredient

The heating satisfaction you get out of your oil burner is determined largely by the kind of fuel oil you use. Heretofore, even the best fuel oil had a tendency to form sludge and gum, rust and scale, which clogged the oil filter and feed line, eventually resulting in a service call and repair bill.

Now, Cities Service Oil Company has added to its fuel oil a miracle ingredient that effectively helps prevent these principal causes of oil burner failure. This amazing ingredient is now blended into every gallon of CITIES SERVICE FUEL OIL—and it is available to you at NO EXTRA COST.

The new CITIES SERVICE FUEL OIL, with the new miracle ingredient, assures you of even greater heating dependability, cleaner, and more economical operation of your burner—and greater protection against sudden failure of your oil burner and a resulting repair bill.

If you haven't yet signed a CITIES SERVICE FUEL OIL CONTRACT for next heating season, we suggest you do so promptly. If you have not received a copy of our Fuel Oil Contract, write or telephone (Jackson 4-1100) and one will be mailed to you.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

CHICAGO, MAY 16.—This is another of the two-team towns where the American League is running a bad second to the National and the A. L. is feeling quite hurt in pride and pocketbook.

When they total up now, they can count off the White Sox the Athletics and the Browns as the league's poor relations, weak competition for the Cubs, the Phillies and Cardinals of the same towns.

POVICH

The worst blow to the A.L. has been the defection of the fans in Philadelphia, where they have gone over to the Phillies in what used to be almost wholly an American League town. Despite the hoo-rah over Connie Mack's Golden Jubilee as manager of the A's, they drew only 8700 to their opening game while the Phillies' opener almost filled the park.

The White Sox, who used to rule Chicago, have been badly outdistanced by the Cubs in recent years. Even without night baseball, and with a last-place team, the Cubs outdrew the Sox almost 2 to 1 last season. These sad facts, heaped on the lowly estate of the Browns in St. Louis, have the A.L. moaning.

IN CHICAGO, matters are reported to be rushing toward some kind of a crisis involving the managerial fate of Jack Onslow, who was almost fired by the White Sox last winter and is now on thin ice again.

Onslow's White Sox, who rose to sixth place last season, have been running dead last this year, the fans have been staying away in alarming numbers, and a tremor is running down the chain of command with the high possibility Onslow won't last the season out.

The pressure is being felt, too, by General Manager Frank Lane, hired two years ago by the Comiskey family to revitalize their perennial second-division club. Lane has the protection of a five-year contract but he is eager to remodel the White Sox according to his own planning—and Onslow was something he inherited, not the manager of his choice.

Onslow was hired by young Charles Comiskey, vice president of the club and son of Mrs. Louis Comiskey, who inherited the team. Lane and Onslow feuded all of last season, but Lane couldn't shake Onslow out of the family tree.

THIS WAS supposed to be the season when the White Sox would do better, not worse. Lane paid a lot of the Comiskeys' money for Al Carrasquel, the hot-shot shortstop from the Texas League, and this year the Sox also would have the season-long services of Gus Zernial, their prize rookie outfielder who was leading the league in hitting when he broke his collarbone last June.

And there was profound respect all around the league for the left-handed pitching staff Onslow had assembled—Bill Wight, Bob Kuzava, Bill Pierce, and Mickey Haefner—plus Randy Gumpert. Hank Majeski, the third baseman from the A's, was supposed to put new punch into the Sox attack, and in Cass Michaels they had the league's finest second baseman.

But things haven't been working out well for the Sox. They have dropped 14 of their first 19 games, won only 3 of 13 on their recent swing through the East. The team hasn't been hitting, the customers haven't been rallying round, revenues are down, and they're 5½ games out of the first division.

NOT ONLY that, but the Chicago sports editors are beginning to ask Onslow embarrassing questions in print, like: Why did he rest Bill Wight, his ace pitcher last season, a full week between starts after the young southpaw had just won his first victory with a two-hit shutout?

And they're also inquiring, publicly: Why was Johnny Ostrowski, currently the best of the team's distance hitters, kept out of both games in Cleveland Sunday, except for a half inning of defensive play?

It's the sort of an editorial campaign that could wean both the fans and the Comiskeys out of their affection for Onslow. And today's Herald-American puts it quite bluntly like this: "A sudden White Sox revival on the field or in the box office will save Onslow's job. At least until his present contract expires at the end of the season. Otherwise, he's doomed, and the Comiskeys will be forced to pick a new field foreman regardless of existing contracts."

As Tough as Anywhere

Top Harness Driver Woried Over Competition at Rosecroft

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

Earl Avery, third-leading driver at Rosecroft Raceway last year, already has a lot of respect for the harness talent he has to compete with starting next Monday.

"It's going to be tough, real tough," Avery said yesterday between workouts at the Oxon Hill plant. "The horses here are going to be as good as those at any track in the country."

Even a casual walk through the rapidly filling stable area confirms Avery's opinion. A handsome lot of trotters and pacers represent such famed stables as Hanover Shoe Farm and William N. Reynolds' Tanglewood Farm.

The horses actually look better than anything Maryland has seen. Their times, posted proudly above their stalls, are better.

Avery, 56-year-old veteran of 31 years in the harness game, trains principally for Clarence T. Black, Troy, N. Y., auto dealer, who now has a showplace at Berryville, Va. Right now there are 31 weanlings on the farm and 30-odd mares.

Black's big breeding plans are reflected in Avery's string which includes nine 2-year-olds. One of the most promising youngsters is Alma Direct, 2-year-old filly by the immortal Billy Direct.

Avery's afraid his luck already may be going bad. Dean Toddler, his first Hambletonian entry, has gone lame on him. Just broken last fall, the 3-year-old son of Dean Hanover never has raced.

However, his workouts excited Avery. The big colt was trotting a mile in 2:10 at Longwood, Fla., and turned in the last quarter in 29 seconds. That last figure is particularly impressive—if maintained it would mean a 1:56 mile.

Avery's still hopeful Dean Toddler will get in action at Rosecroft and go on for the big race at Goshen.

4120 See Jets Skaters Win, 13-12

Capt. Bob Lewis beat the gun in the last seconds last night as the Washington Jets beat out the New Jersey Jolters in the seventh game of their Roller Derby series at Uline Arena, 13-12, before 4120.

It was a low scoring contest all the way as Jersey coach Carl "Big Moose" Payne blocked out repeated Washington threats.

The victory gives the Jets a 4-3 lead in the series with the Jolters which ends tonight.

Hittle Bats, Hurls Nats To 6-5 Win

of Wight, and the Nats saw Judson for the rest of the game.

The got their winning run in the seventh without much warning. Two were out when Evans' slow roller refused to trickle foul, and as a single. Combs followed with a single to left and then Hittle, of all people, and with two strikes against him, singled to right center for the decisive run.

Hittle Sweats It Out

Hittle had to sweat to hold the Sox scoreless. Combs put him in a hole in the sixth with a low throw on Masi's grounder, and the Sox put Masi on third with none out when Carrasquel singled to right. On a squeeze attempt, Judson dropped the ball in front of Hittle ,who threw Judson out at first base, with Masi still holding third.

Carrasquel moved down to second on the play, and Hittle purposely passed Pinch Hitter Ostrowski to load the bases. The next pitch got him out of trouble. Pinch Hitter Eddie Malone drove it to Combs, who launched a lightning double play.

In the eighth the Sox put the tying run on with none out when Masi opened with a single to center. But the unruffled Hittle pounced on Carrasquel's bunt and started a double play via second, with Dente dashing to first to take a smart relay from Combs. Hittle was quite magnificent, really.

IN SHORT . . . The Nats were facing left-handed pitching for the seventh time in their last eight games, and southpaws will also confront 'em in their next two here.

Ray Scarborough and Sid Hudson will pitch against the Sox tomorrow and Thursday afternoons.

Roberts Hurls 2-Hitter as Phils Win, 1-0

Philadelphia, May 16 (AP).—Robin Roberts had the best of a brilliant pitching duel with Ewell Blackwell as the young righthander held the Cincinnati Reds to two hits, both by Ron Northey, and pitched the Philadelphia Phils to a 1-0 triumph.

The Phils made their only run in the first when scratch hits by Richie Ashburn and Gran Hamner and a walk to Eddie Waitkus loaded the bases with none out. Ashburn scored when Del Ennis hit into a double play.

In chalking up his fifth victory against one defeat, Roberts was in trouble only twice. Northey doubled in the second with none out but got no further. In the eighth Dixie Howell walked and Herman Wehmeier, who ran for him, was sacrificed. But he too was left stranded.

Roe Pitches Bums Into 2d

Brooklyn, May 16 (AP).—Preacher Roe pitched the Brooklyn Dodgers into second place in the National League today with a 3-1 triumph over the St. Louis Cardinals.

The slender southpaw stopped the high-flying Red Birds with four hits in registering his third victory against two defeats. It marked only the fifth complete game pitched by a Dodger hurler this season, three of them by Roe. Preacher now has both Brooklyn victories over St. Louis.

Detroit Loses First Place On Dobson's Six-Hitter

Detroit, May 16 (AP).—Ted Williams and Vern Stephens of the Boston Red Sox each bagged a pair of homers today as they helped sink the Detroit Tigers 6-1 behind Joe Dobson's six-hit pitching.

The defeat, together with the Yankees' win, cost the Tigers the league lead.

All six Boston runs came via homers today with the Red Sox jumping on starting pitcher Art Houtteman for two of those round-trippers in a three-run third inning.

Williams and Stephens homered consecutively in that Boston outburst, Ted with one on, and Stephens made it 4-0 when he banged out another one in the seventh.

Williams got his second homer, his eleventh of the season, in the ninth inning off relief Pitcher Hal White after Al Zarilla had walked.

Coolidge Makes Playoffs; Eastern Wins Seventh in Row

Bill Bennings . . .

Dear Folks: At Pimlico.

For some years the Derby and Preakness trainers have had to keep an eye on Ben Jones. However, the Calumet conditioner hasn't an ace. This season it is Max Hirsch, who gives them the jitters. Max sent the often-beaten Middleground out to win the Derby. Last weekend the colt resumed his losing ways behind Hill Prince in the Withers, but Pimlico, on Saturday, may be a different story. The Texas-born Hirsch went to work on a ranch in 1892 as a lad of 12. As a youngster, he rode quarter horses. His father, a Fredericksburg (Tex.) postmaster, tried to steer him into school teaching, the job of his brothers, but the old man finally relented and allowed him to work with horses. Max has been in the top flight since the turn of the century. See you on the rail.—BILL.

Wise Gives 5 Hits; Tech Ousted, 3-2

Sophomore Sonny Wise struck out 10 and pitched Eastern's first-place Ramblers to a 3-2 victory over McKinley Tech yesterday in an Interhigh League game at Eastern. It was Tech's fifth loss and eliminated the Trainers from playoff contention.

Veteran Jack Pope gave up only three hits for Tech to Wise's five, but Pope's teammates committed three costly errors.

The Ramblers gained their seventh victory against no losses on the fast, heads-up running of George Billups, who scored all the way from second base with the winning run on Ralph Sita's sacrifice bunt. Sita drove in all of Eastern's runs, two on a home run.

Shad Casters Have Big Day

2 Groups Keep Boys Out of Mischief By Equipping Them, Fishing With Them

By Ralph Murdock

THE 1950 CAMPFIRE of the Brotherhood of the Jungle Cock will be held at Mount Airy, just above Thurmont, Md., in Frederick County, on Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

Murdock

The committee in charge has decided to continue to place more "oomph" this year on the main purpose of the brotherhood, namely, to create more interest in angling among juveniles by "taking a boy fishing."

In other words, each adult attending the campfire this year must also financially sponsor a boy, either bringing one of his own choice or becoming sponsor for one taken from an accredited group selected by the campfire committee. The powers-that-be have set the number of those who will be entertained this year at 150 adults and 150 boys.

HAVE YOU EVER heard of the Durard Dean Fishing Fund? Maybe not. Ask any of the kids who hang around the grocery store at 16th and A sts. ne. and they will divulge plenty about their fishing club. It started this-a-way:

Durard Dean, who has lived in Northeast Washington long enough to raise a 14-year-old son, is the originator of the fund. An ardent fisherman in his own right, Durard figured that, if he could interest his boy, Harry, in angling, it would at least keep him out of mischief. At the ripe old age of 4, Harry was given a fishing rod which naturally made him a full-fledged angler.

There are now 20 youngsters, from 8 to 16 years of age, in the club. They contribute 25 cents a week and in 16 weeks the fund has grown to almost $100. Several trips are being planned to Rock Point, Chesapeake Beach, and other local fishing spots with one outing ("de luxe") to Ocean City for bigger game.

Mr. Dean said, "Fishing will help a lot to eliminate juvenile delinquency. It's not only a great sport for youngsters, but also a mighty healthy one. Within a year we expect to have at least 50 boys in the fund. Watch us grow."

LOCAL FISHING improved considerably over the weekend. Shad casters who visited Allen's Fresh had a red-letter day Sunday. Ben Gambrel nabbed 275 big roe hickories in seven days. He used "00" Nungesser shad spoons.

John Werner, Accoceek, Md., bagged 50 hickories in a single day. Allen's Fresh was the scene of action here also.

Keith Elkins and Tommy Rutherford selected Benedict on the Patuxent River for hardheads.

Col. Jim Wilson Wins Kenwood Medal With Par 70; Has Three Birdies

Price Second With 72; Match Play Today

By Dave Heller
Post Reporter

Col. Jim Wilson, 1948 United States Air Force golf champion, shot a par 70 yesterday to take medal honors in Kenwood Country Club's Invitational Tournament.

Colonel Wilson shot a par 35 on the outgoing round, and an identical score coming in to lead Charley Price (36-36—72) by two strokes.

Wilson birdied the second, third, and seventh holes to balance bogeys on the first, fifth and tenth holes. His remaining 12 holes were pars.

Ralph Bogart, defending champ, could place no better than fifth as he shot a three-over-par 38 going out and a 37 returning.

Mike Jankowski of Prince Georges was third with 36-37—73, and Pat Martino, unattached, finished fourth after recovering from a shaky 39 on the first nine holes, to card a par 35 on the remaining nine.

The top 64 golfers will tee off this morning for match play in four flights today and tomorrow.

An eight-way tie at 78 necessitated a playoff among Frank Clark, Capt. J. D. Smith, Sid Kearns, Bert Ferguson, Pete Calavino, Julian Williams, Jim Gardner, nd Eddie Ault for first-flight places.

Williams turned in the most sensational shot of the day in the playoff as he birdied the 385-yard first hole with a chip shot into the cup from 70 feet out. Smith, Kearns and Ault also qualified for first-flight match play. The others dropped down to the second flight.

Little Hoyas Lead in Golf

Georgetown Prep's Little Hoyas took over first place in the Metropolitan Schoolboy Golf League by defeating St. John's, 6-3, yesterday at Prep. Bethesda-Chevy Chase, previously tied with Prep, lost to Montgomery Blair, 5-4, at Indian Spring.

In Interhigh League competition, Wilson kept its lead by defeating Roosevelt, 9-0, at Congressional for the Green Tigers' fifth consecutive victory.

In other matches, St. Albans defeated Central, 8-1, at Washington and Gonzaga won, 7-2, from Washington-Lee at Army Navy in Metropolitan Schoolboy play, and Western downed McKinley Tech, 8-1, at Manor in Interhigh play.

Maryland Frosh Rout Longwood

Maryland's freshmen baseball team took advantage of 10 Longwood Prep errors and 17 hits of its own to score a 19-6 victory yesterday at College Park.

Kenwood, Manor Women Gain in League

Kenwood and Manor surged ahead of faltering Army-Navy yesterday in Women's District Golf Association First Team Play.

In matches at Manor, Manor, the defending champion, defeated Army-Navy 7½-1½ to take second place with 27 points. Kenwood won from Washington 8½-½ to take the lead with 28½. Army-Navy, leading until yesterday, is third with 24½. Chevy Chase beat Congressional 7-2.

First team competition has turned completely into a duel between Kenwood and Manor.

Belle Haven Loses, 5-4

Belle Haven held its lead in Women's District Golf Association second team league play despite a 5-4 loss to Chevy Chase yesterday at Army Navy.

However, although Belle Haven has 32½ points and Kenwood 32 to lead the field, Prince Georges, with 29½ and one more match to play than the leaders, looms as the team headed for the title. Dot Kielty Gains In British Golf, Grace Lenczyk Out

Newcastle, Northern Ireland, May 16 (AP).—Dorothy Kielty, Los Angeles flying teacher, breezed into the quarterfinals of the British Women's Golf Championship today with a pair of knockout victories that established her as a co-favorite for the title.

She became the lone American survivor when Grace Lenczyk of Newington, Conn., fell victim to an attack of hooking and bowed to Elizabeth Price, smooth-stroking young English player, 2 and 1.

—Like Wrestling? No! Says Boss—

Roller Derby Has 6 Teams, 16 Cities

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

WHAT GIVES WITH this roller derby business, the new craze that's taken over this town as the starlings once did?

How come, if you're a fan in New Haven and want to cheer for the home team you must root for Washington? Or, say in Miami, you give a yell for New York, or in Boston your heart belongs to the Jersey Jolters?

Is it like the old wrestling gimmick whereby Pete Saure became Ray Steele in Dubuque on Monday, only to wrestle under the name of Lovely Louie in Walla Walla the following evening?

"No siree, nothing like that at all," shrieked Ed Silver, the portly gentleman who's been sheperding the whirling dervishes around Uline Arena for the past week.

"We have a league, keep standings, have playoffs and then a championship derby and all that, just like pro basketball and hockey.

"You see, we have six teams, six basic teams that is, in our league and they skate all over the East and Middle West in real honest-to-goodness competition."

Then why is it that Washington sometimes is New Haven, or Chicago becomes Toledo, or Philadelphia pops up as Troy? That's like the wrestlers, isn't it?

"No, not exactly," the roller derby encyclopedia explained, "You see, roller derby has become so popular that there just aren't enough home teams to go around. Our six basic teams—Washington, Brooklyn, New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Jersey represent 16 cities plus the whole State of New Jersey.

"I know what you must be thinking, but you're wrong. There's nothing phoney about it at all. When the Washington Jets, that's your team here, you know, skates in Cleveland, we'll say, we advertise 'em as the Washington Jets representing Cleveland. Nothing wrong with that, is there?

"And this roller derby isn't merely a spectacle, it's hot competition. These six teams play 160 games apiece and then comes the world series of roller derby—the championship playoffs in Madison Square Garden. Five teams compete in that, with each member of the winning team getting about $1600 apiece. Is that bad?"

BUT ISN'T IT strange, Mr. Silver was asked, that the Washington Jets skate for Cleveland and New Haven as well as Washington and so very few on the Washington team—three to be exact—are Washingtonians?

"What's so strange about that?" the man with all the answers popped back. "How many on the Senators' squad are from Washington? On the Redskins'? On the Caps'? See what I mean?

MR. SILVER, who started out to be a radio announcer but who's now real glad that he didn't what with the roller derbies doing as well as they are, heads the Eastern unit of the Roller Derby Association, occupying much the same position as a wrestling promoter.

His roller derby teams—22 to a team—are shipped in from the International Roller Skating Association, much the same way. Mr. Toots Mondt ships out his wrestling troops to various East Coast promoters.

The Jets are in last place in the six-team league and won't make the lush Garden playoffs next month, but Mr. Silver isn't worried. He controls the other five teams, too.

That's an even better setup than Mr. Mondt enjoys.

The Federal Diary by Jerry Kluttz

Job-Cutting Riders Apparently Exempt Some U. S. Agencies

Some Federal agencies apparently would be exempt from the job-cutting economy riders to the big general budget bill approved by the House.

They are those that pay their employes from trust funds and assessments. Salary funds to pay their employes are not appropriated directly by Congress. In this category are: Federal Reserve, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Comptroller of the Currency, several Agriculture credit agencies, among others.

The 5500 employes of Federal Security's Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors' Insurance also are paid from a trust fund. FSA legal lights are divided as to how the Taber-Thomas and Jensen riders would affect them; some believe the OASI employes would be exempt; others disagree. FSA officials are reported to have asked the Senate Appropriations Committee to decide the controversy.

Both riders exempt medical employes of Veterans Administration and the Public Health Service. How to interpret "medical?" That's another of the many unanswered questions produced by the economy amendments.

Some officials take the position that all employes in VA's Department of Medicine and Surgery and in PHS hospitals are exempt. On the other hand, there are those who argue the rider would exempt only doctors, dentists, nurses, orderlies, etc., and that cooks, bakers, laundry people, custodial employes, in fact, all service personnel, would be covered and sharp reductions would have to be made in these hospital employes if the riders become law.

"There would be no point in keeping all of our doctors and nurses," an official commented yesterday, "if we are forced to cut down on hospital service people."

The President's budget estimated the cost of Federal salaries in the 1951 fiscal year, which begins July 1, at $6,700,000,000. However, only $4,800,000,000 is carried in his budget as an "expenditure." The remaining $1,900,000,000 is paid in salaries out of receipts, trust funds, assessments, etc.

The big question: Would Taber-Thomas require a 10 percent cut among employes covered by the estimated $1,900,000,000? In most cases, budget experts believe it would. They base their belief on the fact that Taber-Thomas would include "obligations" as well as direct budget items.

This is another point to be taken up with the Senate committee. The one big group involved is the 500,000 field employes of the postal service—employes paid out of receipts of local post offices. If the Senate committee agrees with the budget analysts and the riders become law, the postal service would have to drop a minimum of 45,000 employes.

Meantime, AFL President William Green denounced the two riders as "atrocious." He said in part:

"Congress cannot effect real economies by blindly swinging an ax and chopping off the jobs of hundreds of thousands of Government employes without any knowledge or regard of how such action would interfere with necessary Government functions. This is atrocious procedure, especially at a time when efforts are being made to economize and improve Government operations through the intelligent reorganization methods recommended by the Hoover commission."

FTC: At Federal Trade, these appointments also have been made in addition to those carried here yesterday.

JAMES A. HORTON, director of industry cooperation, and P. B. Morehouse and William B. Snow, jr., associate chiefs; Everett Haycraft, director of trial examiners, and Abner E. Lipscomb, associate. D. C. Daniel, director of the bureau of adminstration; and William P. Glendening, jr., assistant secretary, and budget chief.

...NOTES: At Interior, Royle K. Pierson has been named chief of the soil and moisture division in the Bureau of Land Management. NFFE's big local 2 has elected the following delegates to the union's September convention in Los Angeles: George A. Duthie, Agriculture; Mary L. Giordano and Glen E. Gordon, General Accounting; Dr. H. H. T. Jackson and M. E. Markwood, Interior, and Henry G. Nolda and Grace M. Picking, VA.

Tyler Recants, Denies Lansburgh Slayings

The Washington Post

IN APPRECIATION—Ralph Goldsmith (center), vice president and general manager of Lansburgh & Bro. department store, presents $1000 checks to Isaac Jack Katzoff (right) and Robert C. Simmons, president of the Metropolitan Police Department's Boys' Clubs. Katzoff, a druggist who was knifed and beaten, supplied the lead that led to the arrest of William Tyler, jr., in the Good Friday knife murders of two watchmen

William A. Tyler, jr., yesterday repudiated his confession that he killed two Lansburgh's department store watchmen on Good Friday.

The muscular 18-year-old, speaking softly in contrast to his former belligerent demeanor, told United States Commissioner Cyril S. Lawrence:

"All I have to say is that I didn't do it. I was home at the time. They kept me in tight handcuffs all the time . . . all night and all day. My hands got blue. I was tired and sick . . . tired of messin' with them so I signed the statement. I didn't do those murders; I told my lawyer so."

Tyler also denied the robbery-beating of Druggist Isaac Jack Katzoff, with which he is also charged.

After hearing the defendant, Lawrence held him in $15,000 bond for the grand jury on charges of robbing Katzoff, proprietor of a pharmacy at 2107 Alabama ave. se., May 5; and $10,000 bond for the grand jury on charges of assault with intent to kill during the robbery.

Tyler is already under indictment for the murder of the two watchmen, John Carpenter, 66, and Oliver R. Hess, 57.

Extra deputy United States marshals were stationed in Lawrence's hearing room at the Municipal Bldg. when Tyler was brought in.

He was doubly handcuffed. One pair encircled his wrists. These, in turn, were secured to a single handcuff worn by a deputy marshal. In contrast to usual court procedure, the handcuffs were not removed during the hearing.

Yesterday his attitude was meek and his voice so low reporters nearby had difficulty in hearing him. Earlier in the proceedings, Katzoff told the court Tyler had attacked him from behind in the 2400 block of Alabama ave. se.

He said that the defendant dragged him to a wooded area in the rear of the Garfield School, 25th st. and Alabama ave. se., bound and gagged him, beat him, choked him with a belt and then left after plunging a knife into his back.

The druggist loosed his bonds, staggered to a nearby home where police were called, he said.

Katzoff identified Tyler as a youth who frequented his drug store. Armed with the name and a description, police picked up Tyler shortly afterwards.

Guy Mason To Attend Board Parley

District Commissioner Guy Mason, ill with a heart ailment for 7½ months, will attend Thursday's meeting of the Board of Commissioners, associates said yesterday.

Mason

If so, it will mark the first time since January that Mason has visited the District Building. Except for a period of a week, he has been away from his desk constantly since he suffered a heart attack last September 30.

Miss Anne Davidge, Mason's special assistant, said the Commissioner yesterday stated his intention to return Thursday when informed that the Board of Commissioners otherwise would probably not be able to muster a quorum for either of its two scheduled meetings this week. Mason could not be reached for comment.

Yesterday's meeting was canceled because Commissioner John Russell Young was still ill with a cold that has kept him home since last Friday. His special assistant, Charles Stofberg, said Young would be out the rest of the week.

At least two Commissioners, or in the case of the engineer commissioner one of his assistants, must be present for the board to meet.

Dr. Paul F. Dickens, Mason's physician, said he had approved the Commissioner's decision to attend Thursday's meeting. He said Masion is still convalescing and should not return to work full time for another six months. He can, however, return now on a half day basis, Dickens said.

Association Found Guilty Of Fixing Milk Prices

Holtzoff Fines Producer Group $500, Two Dairies In Area $100 Each

By Benjamin Bradlee
Post Reporter

Judge Alexander Holtzoff yesterday found the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers' Association, its secretary-treasurer, and two dairies guilty of fixing milk prices in restraint of trade.

The association, which handles about 80 percent of the milk sold in the Washington area, was fined $500. B. B. Derrick, secretary-treasurer, was fined $100, but the sentence was suspended. Lucerne and Richfield were fined $100 each.

Harvey and Alexandria Dairies were acquitted by Judge Holtzoff of the same charges. Chestnut Farms-Chevy Chase, Thompson's and Wakefield Dairies were acquitted Monday.

Recommend Appeal

Attorneys for the association announced last night they will recommend to the board of directors at a special meeting Monday that an appeal be taken.

The price of milk will not be affected by the decision, milk company spokesmen said.

The group was indicted in March, 1948, charged with conspiring to eliminate and suppress competition in the purchase and sale of milk. The indictment was thrown out by District Court and later reinstated by the United States Court of Appeals. This trial started May 3.

Judge Holtzoff, sitting without a jury, virtually decided the case Monday, in a ruling on the nine defendants' mass motion for a directed verdict of acquittal.

At that time, he ruled that full supply contracts between the association and dairies constituted an illegal price-fixing scheme when those contracts embodied use of the classification plan of determining milk prices.

In a full supply contract the association agrees to supply a dairy with its entire milk needs.

Divides Milk Supply

The classification plan divides the Washington milk supply into three classes—fluid milk, cream, and dairy products—with a separate price for each class. Milk producers are paid according to the use to which their milk is put.

Judge Holtzoff ruled Monday that the three dairies he acquitted did not have full-supply contracts embodying the classification plan.

The two dairies acquitted yesterday operate exclusively intrastate, Harvey's in Maryland, and Alexandria in Virginia.

Judge Holtzoff said there was no evidence those two dairies "knew they were part of any conspiracy."

Before imposing sentence, Judge Holtzoff said that "the court assumes that the only purpose of prosecution was not to exact punishment but to secure adjudication as to the legality" of the defendants' operations.

Robert H. Winn, special assistant to the Attorney General, prosecuted the case.

William E. Leahy, counsel for Derrick and the association, turned to Judge Holtzoff and said "Your honor we stand before you as a guinea pig."

"I'm afraid you do," the judge answered, laughing, "That's your only status here."

Events in Sidwell Friends School History Reenacted At Cornerstone-Laying Ceremony

Theodore Roosevelt's staccato admonitions rang forth once more yesterday at the laying of the cornerstone for the Sidwell Friends School's new Middle School Building.

Seven students were graduating from Sidwell Friends when Roosevelt delivered his inspiring address.

Yesterday, some 700 students from 25 countries took part in the ceremonies at 37th and Tilden sts. nw.

With Senior Wolfgang Somary playing President Roosevelt, students and alumni enacted scenes from the school's 67-year-old history.

Nelson T. Johnson, former Ambassador to China, currently secretary-general of the Far Eastern Commission and a Sidwell graduate, took the part of Thomas Sidwell, founder of the Quaker school.

Wilmot Rufus Jones, a former Sidwell teacher and now principal of the Wilmington, Del., Friends School, was the principal speaker.

J. Austin Stone, chairman of the board of trustees, dedicated the new building.

Financed by private contributions, the building is the first in a long range program under which a kindergarten and gymnasium also are planned.

3 Groups Back, 1 Opposes Schwab Bid

Three citizens associations last night went on record favoring the reappointment of James E. Schwab as vice chairman of the District Recreation Board, while one civic group opposed the move. His term expires May 29.

Approval came from the Anacostia Citizens Association, the Cathedral-Heights-Cleveland Park Citizens Association and the Citizens Forum of Columbia Heights. Opposition was by the East Central Civic Association.

The Anacostia group, meeting in the YMCA, 17th st. and Good Hope rd. se. also asked Congress in a resolution to turn over the recreation and swimming pool facilities to District control.

Action in the Cathedral Heights-Cleveland Park group included the election of Lawrence L. Gourley as president at a meeting held in St. Albans Episcopal Church guild hall, Masschusetts and Wisconsin aves. nw.

Others named at the association's last meeting of the season were Mrs. S. W. Moore, jr., vice president; Gen. George F. Rixey, second vice president; E. L. Florance, secretary and treasurer; Mrs. Walter A. Sellers and John A. Remon, delegates to the federation, and Robert C. Wales and Joseph A. Roney, delegates to the Northwest Council.

Inspector John E. Fondahl of the Metropolitan Police Force, spoke on the organization and the function of the police force, with special reference on the Eighth Precinct located in the association's area.

In other business, the John Eaton School P-TA improved playground project" was indorsed; and the District Commissioners were urged to clean up a vacant lot in the area.

The Citizens Forum of Columbia Heights indorsed a resolution passed last month by the North Washington Council which would provide penalties for smokers, who through carelessness, set fire to furnishings in "places of public abode." The group met at Bell Vocational High School, Hiatt pl. and Lamont st. nw.

The East Central Civic group, meeting in Winfield Scott Montgomery School, 415 P st. nw., also indorsed the United Negro College Fund drive, cited Boy Scout Troop 547 for its achievements and heard a youth night program directed by Mrs. Portia Ware.

In another gathering, the Northwest Central Citizens Association voted to recommend, by letter to the United States District Court here, the reappointment of Mrs. Velma Williams to the District School Board. Mrs. William's term expires this month. They met at Garnet Paterson Junior High School, 10th and U sts. nw.

Gay Rites Dedicate Underpass Officially

People, Pigeons, Poodle Take Part In Dupont Ceremony Under Sunny Skies

By Bill Brinkley
Post Reporter

Some 1000 persons, 100 pigeons and one poodle wearing a yellow ribbon yesterday saw Dupont Circle underpass dedicated in gay ceremonies.

In a rare bit of celestial timing, the elements joined to bless the official inauguration.

At the moment Engineer Commissioner Gordon R. Young formally handed over the $4,750,000 tunnel to the people of Washington, the sun burst through a heavy fortress of clouds.

"This is almost like an omen from heaven," observed Horace J. Meyers, who as president of the Connecticut Avenue Association, "accepted" the underpass. "The sun is shining and the underpass is finished."

General Young hailed the underpass as the prime answer to a situation which made Dupont Circle "just about the worst traffic block in the city, excepting the Anacostia bridges."

"There were the ten approaching streets, all carrying traffic, and four of them carrying a great deal," he spelled out the old congestion. "In addition there was the streetcar line; and just to make it harder, both tracks around one side of the circle. The result, during peak traffic, will be remembered by everyone here."

The Commissioner spoke of the controversial nature of the project of putting the streetcars and through Connecticut ave., traffic underground. But, he added:

"Within a short time, I prophesy, everyone will take it for granted as a notable addition to our city's facilities."

Notes Hardship

Meyers took note of the hardship imposed on Connecticut Avenue businessmen by the construction.

"I see a good many smiling faces that for a long time were quite somber and sullen," the businessmen's president said.

One hundred homing pigeons were released from gold-colored crates to "symbolize the spreading of the welcome news that the underpass is once again open to traffic."

They were released by Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, Mrs. Edward Fay, great-great grandniece of Admiral Samuel F. Dupont, for whom the circle was named, and Mrs. John N. Roberston, wife of the District director of highways.

Two or three of the pigeons appeared to be asleep and had to be pulled out of their cages. The 100 circled over Dupont Circle then headed, presumably, for home.

Barkley Detained in Chicago

Vice President Alben Barkley was scheduled to speak and release the pigeons but was detained in Chicago. The Veep sent a telegram praising the underpass as "another important step in the development and progress of this great city."

Col. E. Goring Bliss, president of the Dupont Circle Citizens Association, presided. He declared how before the underpass "bad traffic conditions were driving people away from the area."

The circle and surrounding area were bedecked with flags. Office-workers leaned from windows to watch the ceremonies on the flower-draped stand. Some confetti fluttered at times from the windows.

Following the ceremonies a motorcade of honored guests passed through the tunnel.

Music was furnished by the Metropolitan Police Band.

Then celebration was capped last night with a program of folk dancing ranging from the Indian performances of Chief Thunder Bolt Left Hand through Irish, Swedish, Mexican and other native dances.

Stagecrafters Bottle Club Wins Suit Over Charter

The Stagecrafters Club, plushest of the 11 after-hours spots the Government is trying to close, was acquitted yesterday of charges that it abused its corporate charter.

Judge F. Dickinson Letts directed the jury to bring in a verdict of acquittal.

He said the Government had "failed to show that there had been misuse, abuse, or non-use of the club's corporate powers."

United States Attorney George Morris Fay has charged that the charters of the 11 clubs, incorporated as "charitable," "fraternal," "educational" and "musical," are "frauds" to violate District liquor laws.

The charters of 4 of the 11 have already been dissolved and the clubs closed when they failed to answer Government suits asking for dissolution of their charters.

A fifth after-hours spot was closed by court order.

The Stagecrafters Club, represented by James J. Laughlin, was the first to be acquitted. But despite the victory, Manager Edward P. (Patsy) Meserole still has his troubles and his club at 3d and E sts. nw. is shut tight.

Bureau of Internal Revenue seals keep the doors closed and will do so until $3090 in back taxes are received.

Meserole also faces an eviction suit from the building.

But the former theatrical booking agent yesterday promised a "bigger and even better opening" in about 10 days.

During the three-day trial, the Government presented testimony from a former Quantico marine that he became a member in "a matter of two minutes," and was beaten up twice inside the building in the same night.

Four women who accompanied the marine testified yesterday, and one, Lorraine Stevens, 3507 W pl. nw., a Navy Depratment clerk, said she had lost a coat in the club.

Meserole testified he ran a legitimate club, even produced plays, bought cemetery plots and insurance policies for members. None of the cemetery plots were used, because none of the members had died, he said, and he has not yet paid for the cemetery plots.

Pvt. Frank Manthos, former one-man vice squad now assigned to No. 1 Precinct, was subpenaed as a defense witness, and said he had been sent a membership card by Meserole.

Ordered to Set Fire to Grill, Man Testifies

A confessed arsonist yesterday testified that Richard R. (Tex) Baker, 47, persuaded him to set fire to Tex's Grill, 1361 H st. ne., last March.

William P. Corley, a former employe of Baker, repeated testimony he gave in District Court in March in the first trial of Baker on arson charges. That ended in a mistrial, after the jury foreman announced a guilty verdict and the last juror polled said "not guilty."

Both Corley of 517 K st. ne., and Charles M. Thorne, 24, 1612 U st. se., have pleaded guilty to complicity in setting the fire with peanut oil and gasoline. Both are awaiting sentence.

Corley testified Baker offered to pay him $50 a week while the business was closed, if he would set the fire, and also promised him an interest in a new business.

Baker is being tried before Judge Jennings Bailey and a jury of eight men and four women.

Montgomery Council Blocks Plans for Apartment Projects

The Montgomery County council yesterday set back three proposed large apartment projects by turning down zoning applications of the backers.

One of the projects envisioned a 10-million-dollar development containing 1000 units.

All three developments were to be in Bethesda areas now zoned Residential "A." The council rejected petitions for rezoning to Residential "C" with the comment that "there is already enough land in Bethesda zoned for apartments to permit erection of 16,583 units which should be enough to satisfy the legitimate needs of the community including those of expanded Federal installations for the present and foreseeable future."

The petition for the proposed $10,000,000 development was filed by John R. Reeves and Clarence C. Keiser, agents for Mrs. Irene W. Parker and the Congress Construction Co.

The petitioners asked rezoning for 42½ acres of Mrs. Parker's estate at Cedar Lane and Rockville Pike.

Reeves had filed a petition asking permission to withdraw his application.

This the council refused on the grounds that the deadline for such filing had passed.

The council emphasized that in its opinion the only purpose to be served by such a withdrawal would be to permit the filing of a new application for rezoning at the next filing period in July. As it stands now in the face of the outright zoning denial, the petitioners must wait 18 months before bringing the matter up again.

Reeves told reporters he would file a lawsuit contesting the council's action on the withdrawal petition.

The second rezoning request to be rejected was one filed by Milton C. White, agent for the White Fathers of Africa, a Catholic missionary order. White's petition asked rezoning for the building of a three-million-dollar apartment project on 17½ acres belonging to the order and which adjoins the Parker estate.

The third request turned down was that of Andrew M. Saul asking rezoning for apartment purposes of 71 acres at Saul rd. and Cedar le., Bethesda.

In other actions the council submitted the names of four persons to the State Welfare Department, two of whom will be selected for six-year terms on the county welfare board. The nominees are Dr. William J. Welsh, Rockville; G. Gregg Everngam, Silver Spring; J. Sterling Bowman, Gaithersburg; Dr. Robert A. Bier, Silver Spring.

New Technique With Vaccines Recommended

By a Post Reporter

Baltimore, Md., May 16—Vaccines fortified with vitamins to give better immunity to disease were recommended here by a drug firm bacteriologist.

The scienttist, Dr. P. A. Little, of Lederle laboratories division, American Cyanamid Co., made the recommendation in his report on special studies of the role of some vitamins in immunity responses, at a meeting of the Society of American Bacteriologists.

The studies, he said, showed that while vitamins themselves don't give disease immunity, some of them at least speed vaccination processes. Among these, he said, is pteroylglutamic acid, of the vitamin B group.

Incorporation of the vitamins in vaccines in this country, he admitted, is less important than its use in other countries where vitamin deficiencies are greater. Most Americans, he explained, probably have enough of the vitamins in their own make-up to help the vaccinations and inoculations "take."

Girl Broke With Charming Rake to Please Her Family and Friends, Then Married on Rebound When He Wouldn't Unbend; Paths Cross Again

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a widow, 28. A little less than a year ago, my husband, to whom I was devoted, was killed in an airplane crash. I have a daughter, 5, and we are comfortably situated due to my husband's foresight.

Some time before I met my husband I was engaged to Ralph, who was (and is) handsome, witty, charming and extremely good company. I broke with him on the advice of my parents and some of my best friends, who judged him a spendthrift and thought he couldn't support a wife. I suppose you might say I married on the rebound, because after I broke with Ralph I wrote him several times asking forgiveness, but he never replied.

My marriage lasted seven years, the happiest years of my life; and in this time I successfully forgot Ralph; at least, my infatuation receded. Then a little over a month ago he appeared unexpectedly, sympathized with my loss, apologized for past failure to write, and naturally I accepted the apology, willing to let bygones be bygones.

Still Unstable; Still Magnetic

AFTER seeing him several times in recent weeks, I find he attracts me as strongly as ever. His character hasn't changed; I hear rumors about girl friends, bad debts, etc., and he looks as if he were drinking and losing a great deal of sleep. But I can't help wishing that I could marry him and be surrounded by the same blessings that surrounded me on my first wedding day.

Also my daughter Sissy is an impelling factor, as she and Ralph promptly charmed each other. Actually I think he would make her a good stepfather, although I doubt he would be a good husband and provider. I am sure I could be happy with him for a while, perhaps a year; but my family and close friends oppose him as before, and even I wonder at times if he is chiefly interested in my money.

Apropos of my rekindled sentiment, a friend of mine who is a graduate psychologist says I am merely projecting my personality back to a former state, either to the first phase of my romance with Ralph, or more likely back to the happy days of my married life. What do you think? I am very confused. D. L.

Dependency Bias Is Her Problem

DEAR D. L.: It seems to me that in latter-day relation to Ralph, you are up against frustration as before. That is why so many "ifs, ands and buts" are tangled into your thoughts of him.

Looking back, you say paradoxically that you turned him down, then married on the rebound. But inasmuch as he completely cold shouldered your attempts to recall him, I think probably he maneuvered you into the break. And whether or not you perceived it then, or can admit it now, I believe you deeply know he doesn't love you (and never has) enough to want to marry you, despite the fact that if given encouragement he skirmishes hopefully with a strong physical attraction mutually felt.

I think it significant that your rebound marriage was notably happy, a wholesome antidote to your stymied yen for Ralph, and that your husband was a paternalist character, obviously, to judge by his farsighted provision for your welfare. These considerations, plus your childish reliance on the judgments of your parents and close friends, suggest to me that your problem isn't Ralph, but rather an inordinate leaner bias.

In cherished relationship to a strongly protective executive reliable man, you can be almost mindlessly contented. But attraction to a person like Ralph is seriously confusing and frustrating to you, because his weak, unstable, evasive wastrel qualities cannot meet your psychological-dependency needs at any point.

At present you are letting yourself get imaginatively involved with Ralph for two reasons: 1. Because he is bidding for your attention, speculatively, at this time when your clinger traits are again alerted to poignant intensity by widowhood. 2. Because better, more substantial and more magnetic suitors haven't yet appeared. For advice, dismiss him from your life as you did before, and seek a man of your late husband's type to be your next helpmeet. M. H.

Our Forefathers Liked Bright Color In Their Homes, Anne Tells Reader Who Is Decorating Period Bedroom

DEAR ANNE:

Will you please help me with a decorating problem. We have eighteenth century furniture, Williamsburg green walls with white ceiling, and Chinese hooked rugs in our bedroom. The drapes are toile, cream background with several shades of red in the pattern.

We have a barrel-back chair for which we want to get a slip cover. This chair gets a lot of hard wear. Can you suggest the color we should get, the type of binding, and also the material to use? We are going to make the slip cover ourselves. The chair has a separate pillow.

Would it be desirable to get a solid color or a material with a slight pattern? We had been thinking of trying to match the red in the drapes, but we were wondering about the wisdom of doing this.

Mrs. Saul Uhr
3000 Connecticut ave.

Our sturdy ancestors of the Federalist period, which inspires your bedroom, didn't stint on color, so that your idea of a red chair to blend with your toile drapes would be quite appropriate to the period. Yellow, or yellow chartreuse, which would be the most likely third color to introduce, would perhaps offer more variety to the room, but would certainly soil faster than red.

If you want a fabric appropriate to the period, you'll do well to look at chintz, a great favorite with the eighteenth century. Ask to see some chintz 'documentaries' which are fabrics with designs borrowed from authentic period materials and wallpapers. Unless your room is very small, you could afford to consider another pattern in your chair cover if you can find one with a small repeat pattern, such as many chintzes offer. A cream or white design on red, reversing the toile, would also be suitable.

Otherwise, a solid color with a pattern in the weave would doubtless be best. A cotton striped rep or herringbone design will give good service.

With a solid color, you could try cream or white binding for accent. However, an all-over red chair is dramatic. If you can't buy matching binding, a sewing machine attachment can be bought to facilitate making it yourself out of bias-cut lengths of fabric.

DEAR ANNE:

On a recent trip to your city, I saw a flower arrangement of magnolias in the window of a prominent furniture store on Connecticut ave. It was discussed today by members of our Faculty Women's Club and several of us would like to know what the preservative was and where it could be purchased. Sincerely,

Mrs. F. B. Stephens,

PARRY-PHRASING

No Novelty to the Guest, But the Site Is Unusual

By Ellen Buell Parry

NO END of parties have been given for Mrs. Perle Mesta, but bachelor George Livingston Williams is giving a large luncheon in her honor on Sunday with an unusual setting.

He is having it at Woodlawn, the historic home of Martha Washington's granddaughter, Nellie Custis, located on the Richmond highway below Alexandria. The lunch will be served in Woodlawn's banquet room, recently furnished with a valuable set of Sheraton antiques which used to grace Mr. Williams own dining-room.

There was some discussion among members of Woodlawn's board as to whether an individual should be allowed to give a private party at this shrine.

It was decided finally that Mr. Williams should have the privilege of using his furniture for a luncheon. In fact, anyone willing to furnish a room of this mansion, entirely bare up to two months ago and still in need of additional furniture, can probably arrange to throw a good party there.

SO MUCH has been written about Madame Mesta that people are beginning to feel they know her intimately.

As Mrs. William Ridgely and Mrs. D. Buchanan Merryman (the Duchess of Windsor's aunt) stepped out of a taxi last week to go in to a party, Mr. Ridgely said to the driver, "This party is being given for our Minister to Luxembourg."

"Oh," said the cabbie, "give my love to Perle."

EVELYN DE LA TOUR was once known as the "dancer with the most beautiful foot in Europe." This was in the days when she was a partner of Leonide Massine of the Imperial Russian Ballet, and a prima donna with the corps de ballet of the Paris Opera. She also won the plaudits of the former Queen of Spain when she danced for Her Majesty, Queen Maria Cristina, in Madrid.

Miss de la Tour—who is Mrs. T. Malcolm Price in private life—is a favorite among Europeans in Washington just as she once was in Europe. Among the 200 pupils at her school of dance here are Alison Franks, daughter of British Ambassador Sir Oliver Franks and Lady Franks; Alexa Jellicoe, daughter of Lord and Lady Jellicoe; Danda and Donatella Ortona, daughters of the First Secretary of the Italian Embassy and Senora Ortona, and Marina and Frances Kokxhoorn, children of the Commercial Secretary of the Netherland Embassy and Mme. Kokxhoorn.

On Friday, these and many other parents will have a chance to see not only what children can do with their feet, but with their whole bodies, in rhythmic interpretations of canvases by contemporary Washington artists. The dance recital is called "Dance Impressions," and it will be held at American University.

MOST people would welcome a trip to Europe, but Henry W. Riley, Assistant Treasurer of the International Bank, was inclined to be a bit sad when he left by plane on Saturday.

Mr. Riley's hobby is vegetable gardening, and he knows what havoc several weeks neglect can do to planting in the spring of the year. He has a beautiful place, Little Farm, near Chain Bridge.

However, duty called—for Mr. Riley is on an important business trip for the bank. His itinerary includes Basle, Zurich, Brussels, The Hague, Paris and London. He returns next month on the Ile de France.

THE LATEST thing in Fairfax is a Village Mart. Members of the Garden Club of Fairfax thought this one up. They won second prize for the booth they had at the Cathedral Flower Mart 10 days ago. They were so pleased that they decided to set the booth up on a vacant lot in the center of their town of Fairfax, and have a Village Mart, to take place this Friday.

The lot is to be transformed into a Victorian garden, complete with the Victorian fountain that was the main attraction of their prize-winning booth. The fountain was originally unearthed by Mrs. Edward (Jane) Howrey at an old antique shop, and carted to her home, Oak Hill, for cleaning and painting.

This was no small job for dainty Jane, but nothing daunts this energetic and talented individual. The fountain is enormous—fully 6 feet across the bowl—with iron cupids and modest maidens disporting themselves about the base.

Mrs. J. L. Buck Wins Plaudits At Luncheon

Mrs. J. L. Blair Buck, retiring president of the National Federation of Women's Clubs, was honored yesterday at a luncheon given in the Vandenberg Room at the Capitol. Cohostesses were Mrs. Leslie Wright, chairman of the federation's legislative department, and Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, consultant to Mrs. Wright.

Guests, most of whom took the opportunity to pay tribute to Mrs. Buck, particularly for the work she has done in international affairs, and to the federation's legislative branch for the assistance it has given in congressional matters, included Senators Harry Byrd, A. Willis Robertson, John Sparkman, Joseph O'Mahoney, Henry Cabot Lodge, jr.; Estes Kefauver, Clyde Hoey, Matthew Neely, Zales Ecton, Margaret Chase Smith and Representative Frank Keefe and the Alaskan Delegate Edward Bartlett. The Congressmen have all been actively interested in legislation which the federation has supported and several of them credited the federation's work with helping to get bills passed.

Messages from Senator Scott Lucas and from Mrs. India Edwards, director of the Women's Division of the Democratic National Committee, were read at the luncheon.

Other guests honoring Mrs. Buck were Mrs. Edward Magdeburger, president of the D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs, and Mrs. Ernest Daniel, past president of the local group; Judge Burnita Shelton Matthews, Mrs. Olive Geiger Faircloth, president of the Women's Bar Association; Miss Laura Berrien, Mrs. Ann Goodbee, Mrs. Chandler Wright and Miss Margaret Carter, division of public liaison, Department of State.

Jobe Says...

The Pique Suit Is Smart Summer Fashion

Sometimes I think this will go down in fashion history as the summer of the suit. Or perhaps from now on, every year will bring a suit summer. Certainly the American woman's devotion to suits as a basic costume has at least evoked suits to all types of fabrics to suit all climates 12 months of the year.

The newest fashion in summer suits is the cotton pique suit—in dark town colors—black smartest—but also navy, brown and forest green. Some of these suits have the inimitable cut and fit achieved by a real suitmaker. Others are in the dressmaker vein—and are worn like a dress. They are unlined—but have taped seams to hold their shape.

Nothing could look crisper and cooler than these pique suits on a hot summer day in town.

Guilty of Treason —To Georgetown

"I'm Guilty. I Built a Modern House," says Columnist Joseph Alsop in the current issue of the Saturday Evening Post.

"Georgetown is a part of Washington, but it is also a state of mind," is the author's opening sentence. And he goes on to defend his Dumbarton avenue stucco domicile against critics and die-hards steeped in the Federal architecture of quaint old Georgetown.

"Charm" wasn't enough for bachelor Mr. Alsop. When he returned from the war he wanted, in addition to charm, sunlight, air, space and simplicity. His own architect, Mr. Alsop was also his own interior decorator. Defying convention, he has mixed the old with the new in his interior design.

Mrs. Bennett's Party Honors April Bride

By Marie McNair

MRS. Henrik Schlubach-Carr, married in New York last month, introduced her handsome bridegroom to her Washington friends at a reception yesterday given by her mother, Mrs. Russell Bennett, at 1925 F Street Club.

The former Florence Harris Downs wore her wedding gown of dark blue lace, the full skirt ballerina length, with a brace of gardenias pinned to her blue purse. He tiny blue hat worn well off her forehead was of matching lace.

Mrs. Bennett, who defied the fact that she's been ill for many months, looked like a Gainsborough portrait in a full black taffeta frock with puffed pockets on the full skirt, a tiny rolled brim black hat faced with shell pink on her graying hair, and a purple orchid fastened to her shoulder.

Perfect Setting For a Party

THE bricked garden of the F Street Club was the perfect setting for a late day party. Bright yellow chairs were drawn up to small tables, shaded from the slanted sun's rays by the low slung branches of old trees.

To go with the drinks, trays of the club's specialite de la maison—open turkey sandwiches sprinkled liberally with black pepper—went the rounds, along with fresh mushroom canapes and watercress sandwiches.

Mme. Prochnik picked a place in the corner to watch the passing show. Mr. Prochnik and Mrs. Emery Smith talked from a nearby vantage point and at another table were Mrs. Carlton Holdrege, Mrs. Davies Fitch and Kurt Hetzel. Little Roberta Downs, daughter of Mrs. Schlubach-Carr, in a long, full, blue organdy frock which she had worn as flower girl for her mother, was running from one group to another under the watchful eyes of her nurse.

Old Washington Greets New Bride

"OLD WASHINGTON," many of whom had seen Florence Schlubach-Carr grow up, make her debut and marry, had come to greet the new bride and her husband.

There were Mrs. Randall Hagner, and Mrs. I. T. Mann with orchids on her shoulder; Joshua Evans and Mrs. Evans, just out after not one, but two bouts with a virus; Mrs. Frank C. Baldwin, the James L. Houghtelings, the Leonard Blocks and George Williams.

Had a chat with Mrs. Fred Britten—Alma wearing gay sandals in orchid, blue and pink; former counselor of the Rumanian Legation, George Boncesco, and Mme. Bonesco reminiscing with her on "the good old days."

Mrs. Effingham Townsend was there, and Mrs. James Souby, Mrs. Ollie James and Mrs. Harry G. Meem, who's sailing June 10 with her son-in-law and daughter, Dr. and Mrs. Floyd Rogers, for Europe.

Conversation Pieces In Millinery

CONVERSATION piece hats were the wide-brimmed beige net edged with yellow velvet pansies interspersed with pale pink roses, worn by Mrs. Morris Cafritz with an ecru lace off-the-shoulder gown over lace, the pointed brim capeline of white organdy with black crown which sat upon Mrs. Robert Waggaman's blonde tresses, and Mrs. Julie Ansberry's "Mata Hari" black straw beret which dipped down to completely hide one of her big blue eyes.

I saw Mrs. Frederick Mitchell Gould, Mrs. Martin Vogel in navy blue; Col. Spencer Cosby, Mrs. William S. Culbertson, in a blue and white flower print; Clarence Hewes, Mrs. McCeney Werlich.

And Mrs. Roy St. Lewis in rustling black taffeta with matching hat; Mrs. Robert E. Lee 3d, Mrs. Richard Cutts up from The Plains, Va.; Chester Flather, Mr. and Mrs. Edward McKinney Hunt, the Minister-Counselor of the Chilean Embassy and Senora de Rodriguez and Mrs. Drew Pearson.

Embassy Dinners Fill the Calendar

The Egyptian Ambassador and Mme. Abdul Rahim entertained last evening at a dinner honoring the Chief Justice and Mrs. Fred M. Vinson. Another embassy dinner was given by the Peruvian Ambassador and Senora de Berckemeyer.

Others were the Ambassador of Indonesia and Mme. Sastroamidjojo, the Minister of Austria and Mme. Kleinwaechter, the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Dean Rusk, Representative and Mrs. Clinton D. McKinnon, Collins Moodie, new Counselor of the Australian Embassy; Dr. Clunies Ross, a visitor from Australia, and Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Purves.

U. S. Ambassador On Leave Honored

COL. AND MRS. JESS BRYAN BENNETT gave a cocktail party yesterday at their house in Georgetown in honor of United States Ambassador to Costa Rica and Mrs. Joseph Flack and their house guests, Col. and Mrs. Edward Fuller of Philadelphia.

Among those invited were Mme. Pandit, Ambassador of India; the Peruvian Ambassador and Senora de Berckemeyer; the retiring Greek Ambassador and Mme. Dendramis; the Ambassador of Chile and Senora Nieto del Rio; Dr. and Mrs. John R. Steelman; Associate Justice and Mrs. Tom Clark; Senator and Mrs. Estes Kefauver; Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Edward G. Miller, jr.; Col. and Mrs. Robert Guggenheim, and Secretary of the Senate and Mrs. Leslie Biffle.

Israel's Embassy Entertains League

MME. ELATH, wife of the Ambassador of Israel, was hostess yesterday to 100 members of the D. C. branch of Women's International League for Peace and Freedom. Tea was served and a talk was given by Dr. Gertrude Bussey, a league member and head of the department of philosophy at Goucher College.

After a brief account by Mme. Elath of life in Israel and of the vital part taken by women in developing the culture and economy of the new country, Mrs. Lester Neuman, vice president of the D. C. branch of the league, introduced Dr. Bussey. The latter spoke of the encouragement and stimulus the heroic women in Palestine had given to women in America.

At the tea ladies of the embassy assisted, dressed in colorful Yemenite blouses and skirts. Paintings and objets d'art from Israel were on display in the drawing room.

Brass and Diplomats Mingle at Party

MAJ. GEN. and Mrs. A. C. McAuliffe entertained at cocktails yesterday for about 75 of their friends at the Officers Club at Fort McNair.

The French Ambassador and Mme. Bonnet and the Austrian Minister and Mme. Kleinwaechter were there. Among other guests were the Secretary of the Army and Mrs. Frank Pace, the Undersecretary of the Army and Mrs. Archibald Alexander, Mrs. J. Lawton Collins, wife of the Chief of Staff; Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Floyd Parks, Lieut. Gen. and Mrs. Edward H. Brooks and Maj. Gen. and Mrs. W. D. Connor.

The Philippine Ambassador, Joaquin Elizalde, will entertain at cocktails on Thursday at the embassy in honor of his brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Manuel Elizalde of Manila.

Brewster Advises Human Touch

GOP Task Force Opens Campaign

By The Associated Press

A task force of 45 Republican women speakers started school here yesterday to learn how to talk about the campaign issues in the November congressional election.

Senator Brewster (R., Me), who served as teacher at the opening session held at the Capitol, advised the group first of all "to remember you are talking to human beings" in taking the GOP story to voters throughout the country.

National and world problems seem "very remote to the individual out in the distant precincts," he said. But he declared every person is concerned with matters affecting their homes and families such as the mounting Government deficit.

Brewster, who is chairman of the Senate Republican Campaign Committee, suggested that the women speakers equip themselves with this postcard-sized statement of Republican policy drafted by his GOP colleague, Senator Margaret Chase Smith of Maine:

"Reducing taxes, balancing the budget, fighting deficit spending and Government waste; fighting communism instead of complacently condoning it; making foreign policy truly bipartisan instead of merely rubber-stamped; fighting and exposing something-for-nothing deception, whether it be socialized medicine, socialized farming or socialized taxes.

"Preventing either management or labor from getting too much power at the expense of the public; maintaining an adequate social security system that does not limit opportunity nor discourage initiative and savings; opposing any curtailment of veterans' benefits, and smashing the filibuster on civil rights."

Mrs. Homer Ferguson, wife of the Republican Senator from Michigan, is cochairman, with Mrs. Howard H. Coffin of the task force training operation, which is scheduled to continue for six weeks.

The Task Force organization will include wives of Senators and Representatives and other selected potential national speakers. It was initiated by Mrs. Gilford Mayes, assistant chairman in charge of women's activities of the Republican National Committee.

The group will be ready for speaking engagements after they have completed six classes in studying specific issues and have been schooled in political speaking techniques by Mrs. Hester Beall Provenson, head of the speech department at the University of Maryland.

Embassy Secretary Talks on Israel

Arthur C. A. Liverhant, first secretary of the Israeli Embassy, discussed Israel at the fifth annual donor luncheon of the Sisterhood of Temple B'nai Jacob yesterday.

Approximately 125 members and guests attended the luncheon at the Mayflower Hotel. Proceeds will benefit the building fund for the new temple.

Mrs. Sam Wolf, chairman of the donor luncheon, presided and Mrs. Louise Fox, president, spoke briefly.

Link With Luciano Charged in Dope Case

Newark, N. J., May 16 (AP).—Charles (Lucky) Luciano's name was linked tonight by a U. S. attorney with a one million dollars narcotics ring here.

Assistant U. S. Attorney Charles J. Tyne said one of 31 persons indicted today as members of the illegal drug ring went to Naples last summer with $100,000 in cash to buy narcotics from Luciano.

Tyne named the Casa Blanca Tavern in Newark as headquarters for the ring.

William Margo, 27, co-owner of the Casa Blanca, was cited by Tyne as the emissary to Italy.

Open for the Season

It Was a Carefree World—And I Was 15

This is the third of a series of six chapters condensed from the current book, "Open for the Season." Written by a veteran hotel operator, it gives a behind-the-scenes picture of life in America's resort hotels in the old days.

By Karl P. Abbott

CHAPTER III

I was 15 years old in 1904, but because of my experience and environment, was very old for my age.

It was a carefree world, and my education was a sketchy affair gleaned from any school that I happened to be near—North or South.

I had thrown off the parental restraint usual for boys of my age and as soon as the resort season was over in Florida I would start North alone—sometimes not showing up for two or three months.

Why my mother and father didn't worry themselves to death I don't understand.

Down South they used to tell the story about two little colored boys. The older said to the younger:

"Boy, how old is yo'?"
"I don' know."
"Is yo' eight?"
"I don't know."
"Is yo' twelve?"
"I don't know."
"Boy, does yo' like girls?"
"No!"
"Boy, yo' is eight."
I was 15!

At odd times during the next 10 years I sold papers, drove cattle, worked on a stone rusher, a moving-picture machine, went to sea on a tramp steamer, ran a bowling alley, drove a streetcar, played semipro ball, went on the road with a small-time minstrel troupe, played in a band, rode freights, and worked on a farm.

But I always came back to hotel business.

Father's hotel was full one afternoon when I happened to glance at the board in the lobby and noticed that a room had registered.

There were no room telephones but push-button bells with a big annunciator in the lobby over the bell row. When a room rang in, a white spot showed under its number on the board.

The bellboy was busy so I took the front stairs two at a time and knocked on the indicated door.

A feminine voice said, "Come in," and in I walked.

Before the mirror a stately corset looked at me in utter amazement.

She said, "Young man, I rang for a chambermaid, but as long as you are in here you'll have to do. Help me lace up my corset."

With fumbling fingers and my knee in the middle of her back, I went to work. The perspiration rolled but finally the strings were tied. I got out of there with a shiny new dime.

When we went South that fall we stayed at Young's Hotel in Boston. Father collected a party of about 60 help for the Pinehurst hotels. They were to sail one morning on a steamer for Norfolk and I went down to see them off.

The first call of "All-l-l ashore, goooin' ashore," had been sounded. Off to one side was a tearful group of a dozen New Hampshire girls who had signed to go South as waitresses, and a more terrified and homesick lot you never saw.

They had decided not to sail. But I knew father had to have them.

So I said easily, "Now you girls just forget your troubles; you don't have to go unless you want to. You've never seen a big ship, so why don't you let me take you over the boat before it sails?"

The girls had a gay time as I showed them over the boat, and just at the right moment I was leading them down through the engine room, the galley, and the dining salon.

When we came up on deck we were passing Fort Warren in the harbor. They wanted the boat stopped, but they were on their way South.

The next morning, when they came up on deck, it was bright and sunny, and they were glad they had been shanghaied.

One of my first hotel jobs "on my own" was front clerk at Bill McAuliffe's Alcazar in St. Augustine, Fla.

And here's a tip I'll pass along with the hope that it will do some good: Don't ever try to beat a room clerk's ears down. He knows that you have had a hard trip and that you are tired and hungry and he makes due allowances.

But if you stalk up to the desk, and try to show how important you are, brother, you'll be sent to the worst rooms in the house whether you know it or not.

His Feet Hurt, Too

The room clerk has had a hard day, too. His feet hurt, and, frankly, he is bored.

He isn't easy to fool on any terms.

The oldest hotel tradition in the world is the one about the new shoes. If a couple comes up to the desk and both are wearing new shoes, the clerk knows he has a bride and goom. If hers are new and his old, they have been married a long time.

One evening a busload of guests filed up to the desk at the Alcazar and I looked into the face of "Smiling Diamond Joe" Connor.

I recognized him at once. He was one of the top jewel thieves in the country.

He had a lovely old lady with him that he registered as his mother.

I didn't want to cause a scene, so I gave him a cordial greeting. After I had all the guests registered and in their rooms I footed it up to Mr. McAuliffe's apartment.

"I hate to disturb you" I told him, "but Diamond Joe Connor just checked in. I didn't want to cause any commotion at the front desk, so I gave him a suite and he has just gone up."

"That's using your head. Now go to Connor and tell him Mr. McAuliffe sent you, and that Mac wants to know whether he is working or on vacation. Connor is the slickest jewel thief in the business but his word is as good as a Government bond.

"If he says he is on vacation don't worry about it any more."

I went to Connor's suite.

I said, "Mr. McAuliffe sent me to ask you whether you are working or on vacation?"

Connor laughed and called to the old lady: "Hear that, Ella?" He walked about the room for two or three minutes, then turned around and looked me straight in the eye.

"You go back and tell Mac that I'm on vacation."

TV 'Superhighway' To Use Microwave

By Wayne Oliver

NEW YORK.—A new television superhighway between New York and Chicago is nearing completion and is due to go into service before the end of summer—probably in July.

It is the Bell System's 333-mile radio relay link that will provide four television channels between the two cities on microwave radio beams. But since two of the existing four channels between the two cities by coaxial cable will be converted to telephone use, the net increase will be two television channels, making six in all.

As presently equipped, the radio relay equipment will carry a greater portion of the original television signal than coaxial cable and its use should mean that viewers along the Chicago-New York route will see network programs with picture quality practically equal to that of local telecasts.

The new radio relay link will be a part of the main line transcontinental television hookup to the Pacific Coast. The network will push as far as Des Moines and Omaha by radio relay in October. And a radio relay connection from Omaha to San Francisco by way of Salt Lake City and Denver is due for completion late in 1951 or early 1952.

* * * *

Searchlight Focusing

THE New York-Chicago microwave beams will be relayed by 33 towers averaging some 25 miles apart and ranging from 60 to 200 feet high. The microwaves are about as far apart as the length of a cigarette, and four million of them pass a given point in a second. They are focused like searchlight beams in relaying them from one horizon to the next. Each tower picks up an incoming beam, amplifies it, refocuses it and passes it along to the next tower.

Since the microwaves travel along narrow beams and are at frequencies far above those used in television broadcasting, set owners along the way can't pick them up but still will have to depend on the nearest station.

The American Telephone & Telegraph's Co.'s Bell System video network is making increasing use of radio relays as compared with the more familiar underground coaxial cable, but is continuing to use both.

Other network additions or extensions definitely scheduled for the remainder of this year, some coaxial cable and some radio relay, include:

September—From Richmond southward to Charlotte, Jacksonville, Atlanta and Birmingham. Also, Los Angeles to San Francisco.

October—From Dayton, Ohio to Indianapolis to Louisville. Also, from Des Moines to Minneapolis and from Omaha to Kansas City. Ames, Iowa, also will be connected by way of Des Moines, which has no station yet.

A. T. & T. also has announced that the network will be extended to Miami, Fla., sometime next year.

Bigger Pictures

THE swing in public preference toward bigger television pictures is emphasized by latest manufacturing statistics. They show that of picture tubes made in the first three months of this year, only 2 percent were 10 inches or smaller. And 37 percent were 14 inches or larger.

General Electric last week announced a picture tube 24 inches across, compared with 19 inches for the largest size currently in general use in home sets. DuMont, however, has produced a whopper 30 inches in diameter.

* * * *

MORE new television models at lower prices have made their appearance. Tele-Tone Radio Corp. last week brought out a 16-inch console for $229.95—or $40 under its own previous low for that size set. John Meck Industries, Inc., has announced a new line ranging down to $99.90 for a 10-inch table model.

The DISTRICT LINE by Bill Gold

Bing's French Postcards Are Pretty Clever

About a thousand District Liners got postcards from Paris recently. The cards read:

"Having a swell time! How's about listening at 10 a. m. weekdays on WTOP (1500 on the dial) when I'll tell you about my trip? Regards, Bing Crosby."

It turns out that the mailing was one of the smartest publicity stunts of the season.

The cards were hand-written and addressed here in Washington, then shipped in bulk by American Express to Paris. There they were stamped and mailed back to the District.

WTOP's publicity man says the recipients were chosen at random from Greater Washington phone books—and that baffles me. The lady at our house got a card, and neither she nor I are listed in any phone book.

Another recipient was Clyde Ferris of 6317 Rhode Island ave., Riverdale Md. Clyde was superintendent of construction at an Army base in Seward, Alaska, in 1942 when Der Bingle came up for a visit, and he recalls that Crosby made a big hit with everybody in camp.

"He's a swell fellow," recalls Clyde, "and we got to be pretty good friends. I guess I'll have to acknowledge the card, even though it wasn't exactly personal."

GIVE-AWAYS

"Four affectionate, adorable 6-week-old kittens." (Wisconsin 7138.)

"Four cute puppies, mixture of fox terrier and cocker spaniel." (Warfield 4753 after 6:30 p. m.)

"Four adorable, healthy 6-week-old kittens." (Owens 4520.)

"Eight housebroken kittens, 5 weeks old; four black, three yellow and one calico." (Wisconsin 7558.)

MAIL BAG

Dear Bill:

In considering Capital Transit's periodic requests for fare increases, I think the PUC overlooks an important point.

For example, there's a little lady who boards a D-2 express bus each morning and establishes herself firmly between two uprights near the front. In spreadeagle fashion she holds tight to both, regardless of how many passengers try to crowd in later.

Now, everybody knows that Capital Transit's traditional allotment is one upright for four people, and one seatback handle for two people.

When they permit one passenger to monopolize two uprights, it's no wonder they're losing money. The PUC has got to lay down a hard and fast rule: One hand-hold, one fare; two hand-holds, two fares.

Naomi S. Talley
3611 S st. nw.

Dear Naomi:

And how about three fares for a reserved seat? Bill.

PERSONAL NOTES

Mary Englert, 1910 35th pl. nw.: Detailed information about the Hollywood baseball team would be available locally, I suppose, but I think you'd do much better to write to the sports editor of the Hollywood Citizen-News. He should know the players personally.

John Evans, Arlington, Va.: I don't have the space for lost-and-found items. But as a service to its readers, The Washington Post will run a free "found" ad among its classifieds. If you list that fielder's glove you'll probably make some boy very happy.

DOUBLE TROUBLE

I think it's touching to see two brothers go into business together. But I'm afraid that the twins who held up the Economy Finance Co. Monday carried the idea a bit too far.

PLAY ON WORDS

I can't believe that actors starve
When plays are in the hole,
For every time a play is bad
Some ham is in a roll.

PRESERVED OR PICKLED?

A local bottle club says it qualified as a "charitable" organization by buying burial plots for its members. But nobody ever used the cemetery lots, because no member ever died.

The moral must be: Join a bottle club and be "well preserved."

THE WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Reds Shift Berlin Stand—McCloy

By Drew Pearson

High Commissioner McCloy has cabled the State Department from Germany that the Communists are getting cold feet and will back down on their threat to seize Berlin during their May Day demonstrations.

McCloy

McCloy reports he has learned that Foreign Minister Vishinsky has called the East German Communist leaders to Moscow and has ordered them to abandon their invasion. Vishinsky and the Politburo are now convinced that the West means business and will fight to keep Berlin.

But Vishinsky gave the German Communists a caustic dressing down for tipping the Russian hand by their boastful speeches about what they intended to do. He figures that if the Communists hadn't blabbed so much, they could have surprised the Western troops and taken over the city in a few minutes.

Uncle Sam Pays and Pays

A Missouri grain company that grew up overnight shows how Government agencies sometimes don't let each other know what the other "hand" is doing. The company rented a section of Camp Crowder, Mo., from the Government for $5569, then, in effect, leased the same property back to the Government for $204,000.

Both contracts were signed within a week after the company, Midwest Grain Storage & Realty, was incorporated last September. First, the company rented 113 buildings at Camp Crowder from the War Assets Administration, then turned these buildings into storehouses for the Agriculture Department.

War Assets charged $1 per building, plus varying rates per square foot, totaling $5569 in rent. However, the Agriculture Department paid Midwest one twentieth of a cent per bushel per day for storing 2,041,803 bushels of surplus corn. This amounted to $204,000 for 200 days—the maximum number of days that the rate is in force each year.

Thus, while Uncle Sam leases from Peter to pay Paul, Midwest Grain Storage rakes in the profit. However, A. H. Myers of Kansas City, company president, claims the gravy isn't as thick as it looks. In the first place, he says, Midwest had to pay for unloading the grain. The Agriculture Department provided $30,627 extra for this, but Myers claims it cost $40,000. When it comes time to move the grain, Myers also figures it will cost more than the $15,303 handling charges which the Government is committed to pay.

However, Myers is counting on the $204,000 storage contract being renewed for another year. And, to this column it looks like good business—if you can get it.

Note: V. M. Harris Grain Co. of Scott City, Kans., an established firm, is also renting facilities at Camp Crowder for storing 895,936 bushels of surplus wheat. Harris pays $16,713 in rent, collects $66,800 in storage fees.

Fur Flies at Hearing

Ohio's portly Congressman Clarence Brown flew into a rage the other day after an obscure Air Force captain got the best of him at a House hearing.

Brown was championing the cause of the private grocers near Wright-Patterson Air Base, who complained that the base commissary was hurting their business.

However, Capt. A. M. Puncsak, the sales officer, refuted each argument brought up by Brown and his constituents, with such cool consistency that the Congressman began raising his voice.

This offended Brown's congressional dignity, which he soon discarded altogether. After Puncsak left the room, following the hearing, Brown exploded.

Waggling a finger under the noses of the other Air Force officers, Brown shouted: "That little S. O. B. (referring to Captain Puncsak)! He ought to be court-martialed!"

Then he went into a tirade about military officers in general.

"Some of these military people think they've got the world with a string around it," said the Congressman from Ohio. "I have tried to be good to you, but you people haven't done right by me. Don't forget, I've got a long memory."

As an afterthought, he quickly added: "Don't think I am trying to intimidate you now."

At this remark, Brown really blew up. His language can't be repeated.

Merry-Go-Round

Secretary of Defense Johnson was on the horns of a political dilemma about the televised Cabinet meeting in Chicago. Generals and admirals urged him to attend, said it was politics. But the President wanted him there. What the admirals forgot was that Louey got his cabinet job partly by raising more money than any other man in 1948 . . . Postmaster General Jesse Donaldson is getting more mail than even the President. Reason—a planned campaign against the once-a-day mail service by Bill Doherty, the ambitious president of the National Association of Letter Carriers. The carriers are stuffing handbills and postcards in letter boxes asking that protests be mailed to Donaldson. The postmaster general is getting it from boht sides, from friends of the carriers and those who resent being pressured by the mailman .
